WHIG TO THE REPACH!

Action! Action! Action! This is the watchword to-day. Whigs give one day to your country and your principles. Let every Whig consider himself a member of a Vigilant Committee, and spend the day at the polls, or in canvassing his Ward, and seeing that every Scott vote is out.

Vote early! Do not put it off until a late hour. Vote in the morning, or in the forenoon. Get all your vote in as soon as possible. Risk nothing from scattergoods. When a vote is in it is safe. Go to the polls as soon as you read this, and cast your vote, and then enquire what you can do in the good cause, and work enough will be found. Work for your country, for Scott, and Victory!

BE OF GOOD CHEER, WHIGS.

Accounts which reach us from every part of this county, and from various parts of the State, are of the most gratifying description. If all that flow in to us and write us, prove correct, Gen. Scott will have a large majority in Pennsylvania. As goes Pennsylvania, so goes the Union. This is the great battle ground. Locofocoism fights hard, and brags harder, but this is no evidence of strength. We tell you, Whigs, that there never was more inducement to work, and to work hard, than now. The opposition know that we are invincible when we are zealous and united, and that is the case now, and thoughtful Pierce men are quite uneasy at the inflations of Whig zeal. The signs are cheering. Let every Whig work for a glorious victory!

THE CITIES AND THE COUNTY.—There will be a noble struggle between the cities and the country, to see which can bring the largest majority for "Old Chippewa." If the cities do not give an thirty the townships and boroughs will beat them. A better spirit never existed in the country, and we expect the largest majority ever given for any candidate. Let us see if we cannot exceed them in this noble race.

Our correspondent "Truth," corrects the errors and insinuations made in relation to the County Commissioners and the Tally papers. It appears that the Commissioners acted perfectly fair and honorable in the whole matter, as no one would doubt but those who determined to find fault.

The issues of the present election are truly of great magnitude, and sufficient almost to appal any but brave hearts. If the Whigs are defeated now, as the New York Times correctly remarks, for four years the suicidal policy of the opposition must be the policy of the country.—American industry must knuckle to the well protected enterprise of foreign competitors. Our rivers must be choked and ruined as the highways of commerce, and our harbors from neglected obstructions, grow to be yearly less and less haven's of safety for storm-driven ships. The principles which they have considered the only sound cause for the guidance of a free people will be forsworn, and doctrines of the most dangerously radical order will be announced from high places, as the lesson of Young America to the world. Instead of the sound republican, conservative, and yet progressive, foreign policy of the present Administration, will be substituted the abstractions of the "Virginian school," the disastrous experiments of such theorists in political economy as Douglas, and the revolutionizing doctrines of demagogues hungry for promotion, and ready to adopt the most Quixotic scheme that promises "places" for the thousands who have fed so long on promises.

Such, and such consequences of defeat, that Whig will neglect any duty which can be performed to save our country and ourselves from such fearful calamities. It may be too late to save the country four years hence. It may be, and if Pierce is elected, undoubtedly will be, involved in an unnecessary and ruinous war, and at the slightest difficulties which may end in the subversion of our liberties.

For the Pittsburgh Gazette.

MR. EDITOR:—I noticed in the Union of yesterday a charge of a "Base attempt at fraud," against the County Commissioners. Allow me to say the charge, from beginning to end, is an unqualified falsehood. The County Commissioners are not bound to furnish the names of electors on the tally papers, but in order to facilitate the duties of clerks, &c., of election districts, the assurance that it was correct, and by said the clerk of the Commissioners had taken the trouble of having all the candidates' names printed. In this instance, Mr. King, one of the Commissioners, called on the editors of the Post, Gazette and Visiter, and requested them to furnish him with a correct ticket, so as to make out the tally list, which was done by them with the assurance that it was correct, and by said tickets were the tally lists made out. The Post on last Monday, had the ticket for electors, as placed on the tally list, at the head of its columns. The clerk presumed he was acting fairly, but it appears that both parties are of the opinion that the Christian name ought to be printed in full. Acting under this belief, on last Tuesday, the clerk was told he had better alter all the names having initials, as far as he could, and was handed a Whig ticket which had been received that morning. He corrected the tally lists for the Whig electors so far as they had not been sent out, (many of which had been in the hands of the Judges and Inspectors in the county districts.) After handing the ticket as a correct one, it was the duty of the Post to have the alterations made if they wished it. As soon as Messrs. M'Candless, Burke, and others, suggested a correction of the names, the Commissioners agreed to accommodate them, by sending out to the different districts, and correcting both the Whig and the Democratic names on the tally list so as to satisfy all parties. The custom of sending out lists with initials has been of long standing;—it is impossible in some instances to procure the whole name in time, so as to have the papers in the hands of the proper officers on the day of the election. The clerks of election districts always correct the tally list so as to correspond with the name voted for.

The discovery of finding out such a "fraud" has remained for the present year, and the gentleman who has acted with so much "shrewdness and sagacity" deserves high distinction of his party, and the thanks of the whole community. If the Commissioners had furnished the ticket as sent from the office of the Union on Saturday, to the Judges and Electors, three or four names would have been voted for by the "Democrats" that could not have found an owner, which might have been very disagreeable to fault-finders, like the editors of the Union. In the lists sent out, the Whigs as well as Democrats would have been losers, if the objection had any weight.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 29, 1852.

Mr. Webster's Funeral—Impressive Scenes—Mr. Corwin gone to Ohio.

The deep impression made upon the public mind by Mr. Webster's death, is attested by the observance in this city, in commemoration of his funeral at Marshfield. Although he died six hundred miles distant, and though he had been when called away from the scenes of earth, absent from the federal capital two months, our citizens expressed their sympathy and condolence by a cessation from business, and by hanging their stores and dwellings with the vestments appropriate to grief. The curtain has now dropped over the mournful scene. He has gone

"to join
The innumerable caravan, that moves
To that mysterious realm, where each shall take
His chamber in the silent halls of death."

We remain, at first to mourn, but soon the cares of life, return, and we reflect upon the illustrious dead only to remember

"that it! that breathe
Will share his destiny. The day will lavish
When thou art gone, the solemn hood of care
Clod on, and each one, as before, will chase
His favorite phantom; yet all these shall leave
Their mirth and their employments, and shall come
And make their bed with thee."

Yes, every such death turns the heart of the nation to "that undiscovered country," "that mysterious realm, and whither we are all tending. But our thoughts soon revert to earth, and we feel that God has wisely ordered that the smaller cares of life should occupy our thoughts rather than that they should dwell upon the terrible change appointed for all mankind.

The Secretary of the Treasury set out this morning for Ohio. He will seek repose from the fatiguing duties of his office for a fortnight. It is conjectured that after the election, he will take occasion to vindicate himself in a public manner before his neighbors and friends from Old's slanders, in respect to the Gardiner claim. His defence, however, is already complete by the voluntary acquittal rendered by the Committee, of adverse politics, raised to investigate the charges preferred by Olds.

Next Tuesday tells the tale of the last four months. Your readers have only to do with Pennsylvania. For the sake of the good old cause and their own interests, let me entreat them not to neglect their duty. JUNIUS.

FURTHER BY THE NIAGARA.

ENGLAND.—The Court had returned to London, and a Cabinet council was held on the 15th inst., for the purpose of appointing a day for the meeting of Parliament.

A meeting of Iron masters was held at Wolverhampton, on the 13th, at which the recent rise in prices was approved, although it was denied that the manufacturers have as yet derived but little advantage from the rise, as they had mostly contracts on hand at the old quotations. A circular letter, issued by a Liverpool house to the trade, takes a contrary view, and warns against the reckless speculation that is keeping up the figure, clerks in merchant's offices and other persons without capital being known to hold large quantities of Iron Script. From these and other circumstances, the house in question, which writes anonymously, anticipates a panic ere long.

The yacht America figures largely in the news on this week. On Tuesday, the 12th, she competed with the Swedish yacht Swerigo, and defeated her by fully twenty minutes, the course being round the Nab light, Isle of Wight, buffooning to the fog and light winds, the race was not exciting.

Lord De Blaquire's challenge had been accepted for £500 by J. L. Craigie, Esq., with the yacht Volante, and for £1,000 by J. Mackintosh with the iron yacht Diadem. The race to be from Erith, on the Thames, to the Nore and back, and to come off when the weather is suitable.

FRANCE.—The accounts of Louis Napoleon's reception in the Provinces, are still dazzling. His speech at Bordeaux had been placarded in Paris, and was to be posted in all the 37,000 communes in France.

Titles of high nobility for M. M. Persigney, Morney, Fould, De Roche and others, and a measure of general amnesty, is looked for as the first act of the new Emperor's reign.

SWITZERLAND.—The Prussian Ambassador has ordered all Prussian workmen to return to Prussia within a month, to withdraw them from the influence of democratic doctrine.

SPAIN.—The subscription for the wounded and for the families of those killed in repelling the Lopez expedition at Cuba, amounts to 281,000 pistareens, and the widow of General Enna received 10,000 pistares, and the widow of Francisco Fadal 6,500.

DENMARK.—Negotiations are in progress between the Bavarian Government and the Governments of France, England, and Prussia, respecting the succession of the throne of Greece.—Prince Adelbert of Bavaria, brother of King Otho; is named as heir apparent and has embraced the Greek religion, a preliminary step to the throne. Adelbert is the fortunate youth for whom the Emperor of Russia destines the hand of the Princess Vasa.

EXTENSIVE CONFLAGRATION.—TROY, Oct. 28.—A fire broke out this afternoon about two o'clock, in an out-building, which soon communicated to the car-finishing shop of Eaton, Gilbert & Co., on the west side of 6th street. That and an adjoining shop, with five new cars and several small dwellings adjacent and in the rear, were consumed. The fire communicated to the row of brick buildings on Fulton street, five of which, with adjoining wood dwellings, were destroyed. The flames communicated to the Baptist Church on 5th st., which was consumed, together with some small dwellings in the alley—in all about 25 buildings. The gross loss is estimated from $40,000 to $50,000. Almost half insured.

IMPORTANT MOVEMENT CONCERNING HAYTI.—It is stated that two American gentlemen, officers of the army of the Dominican republic, in the Island of Hayti, have made arrangements with certain parties in the United States for the purchase of a steamer, in which they propose to take a large number of emigrants to Dominicka. Eight hundred men, it is said, have already enlisted for colonization among the Dominicans, the terms offered being highly advantageous to men, of enterprise and intelligence.—Balt. Sun.

BOSTON, Friday, Oct. 29, 1852.

Mr. Webster's funeral was attended by at least 10,000 persons, among them Gen. Franklin Pierce, Gov. Marcy, of N. Y.; Hon. Abbott Lawrence, Hon. Edward Everett, Hon. Charles Ashman, Gov. Boutwell, Ex-Chancellor Jones of New York; Judge Sprague, and many other distinguished men.

Mr. Webster was buried on his own grounds with his first wife and children.

Rev. Mr. Alden commenced by reading an appropriate extract from the Bible, after which he pronounced with great feeling, the following address:

On an occasion like the present a multitude of words were worse than idle. Standing before that majestic form, it becomes ordinary men to keep silence. He being dead, yet speaketh. In the words he applied to Washington in the last great public discourse he ever delivered, "the whole atmosphere is redolent of his name.—Hills and forests, rocks and rivers echo and re-echo his praises." All the good, whether learned or unlearned, high or low, rich or poor, feel this day that there is one treasure common to them all, and that is the fame and character of Webster—to recount his deeds, ponder over his principles and teachings, and resolve to be more guided by them in future.

Americans by birth are proud of his character, and exiles from foreign shores are eager to participate in admiration of him, and it is true that he this day everywhere more an object of love and regard, than on any day since his birth; and while the world, too prone to worship mere intellect, laments that the orator and statesman is no more, we enter on more sacred ground, and dwell upon the example and counsel of a Christian, as a husband, father, friend. I trust it will be no rude wounding of the spirit, no intrusion upon the privacy of domestic life, to allude to a few circumstances in the last scenes of the mortal existence of that great man who is gone, fitted to administer Christian consolation and guide to a better acquaintance with that religion which is adapted both to temper our grief and establish our hopes. Those who were present on the morning of the Sabbath upon which the head of a family conducted the worship of his household, will never forget, as he read from our Lord's Sermon on the Mount, the emphasis which he alone was capable of giving to that passage which speaks of the divine nature of forgiveness—saw beaming from that eye, now closed in death, the spirit of him who thus uttered that God-like sentiment. And he, who by the direction of the dying man upon a subsequent morning of the day of rest, read in their connection those words, "Lord, I believe, help thou mine unbelief," and then closing the chapter of our Savior's last words to his disciples, particularly requested to dwell upon this clause of the verse: "Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are one."

Behold a sublime illustration of the indwelling and abiding power of Christian faith! and if these tender remembrances only cause our tears to flow more freely, it may not be improper for us to present the example of the father, when his great heart was rent by the loss of a daughter whom he most dearly loved. Those present on the occasion will recollect when the struggle of mortal agony was over, retiring from the presence of the dead, bowing together before the presence of God, and joining with the afflicted father, as he poured forth his soul, pleading for grace and strength from on high, as upon the morning of his death.

We conversed upon the evident fact that for the last few weeks his mind had been engaged in preparation for an exchange of worlds. One who knew him well remarked: "His whole life has been that preparation." The people of his rural neighborhood, among whom he spent the last twenty years of his life, among whom he died, and with whom he is to rest, have been accustomed to regard him with mingled veneration and love. Those who knew him best can the most truly appreciate the lessons both from his lips and examples, teaching the sustaining power of the Gospel.

His last words, "I still live," we may interpret in a higher sense than that in which they are usually regarded. He has taught how to attain the light of faith and the life of hope. Vividly impressed upon the memory of the speaker is the instruction once received as to the fitting way of presenting the divine truth from the sacred desk. Would that its course might be felt by those who are called to minister in divine things. Said Mr. Webster, "When I attend upon the teachings of the Gospel, I wish to have it made it made a personal matter—a personal matter—a personal matter."

It is to present him as enforcing the Divine lessons of wisdom and consolation that we have recalled to your minds these precious recollections, and we need make no apology. It would be unreasonable in letting the present opportunity pass without unveiling the inner sanctity of the life of the foremost man of all this world, for his most intimate friends are well aware that he has had it in mind to prepare a work upon the internal evidences of Christianity, but which, from his heartfelt conviction of the Divine reality of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, but finding himself rapidly approaching those august scenes of immortality into which he had so often looked, he dictated the most important part of his epitaph, and so long as the rock shall guard his rest, and the ocean sound his dirge, the world shall read upon his monument not only—"One of the few, the immortal names that were not born to die"—but that Daniel Webster lived and died in the Christian faith. The delineation which he gave of one of his early and noble compeers could never have been written except from experimental acquaintance with that which he holds up as the chief excellence of his friend. This description we shall apply to himself, trusting that it will be as well understood as admired. Political eminence and professional fame fade away and die with all things earthly. Nothing of character is really permanent but virtue and the moral worth; these remain. Whatever of excellence is wrought into the soul itself, belongs to both worlds. Real goodness does not attach itself merely to this life. It points to another world.

Political and professional reputation cannot last forever; but conscience void of offence before God and man is an inheritance for eternity. Religion is therefore a necessary and indispensable element in any great human character.—There is no living without it. Religion is the tie that connects man with his Creator, and holds him to his throne. If that tie be broken at all, all broken he floats away a worthless atom in the universe, its proper attraction all gone, its destinies and its whole future nothing but darkness, desolation and despair.

A man with no religious duty, is he whom the Scripture describes in such terse but terrific language, as "living without God in the world." Such a man is out of his proper being—out of the circle of all his duties—out of the circle of all his happiness—away, far, far away from the purposes of his creation. A mind like Mr. Webster's—active, thoughtful, penetrating, as it was—could not but meditate deeply on the condition of man below, and feel its responsibilities. He could not look on this mighty system—this universal frame—this wondrous feeling, that it was created and upheld by an intelligence to which all other intelligence is responsible.

I am bound to say that in the course of my life, I never met with an individual in any profession or condition, who always spoke and always thought with such awful reverence of the power and presence of God. No irreverence, no lightness, even on less familiar allusions to God and His attributes, ever escaped his lips; the very notion of a Supreme Being was with him made up of awe and solemnity; it filled the whole of his great mind with the strongest emotion. A man like him, with all his proper sentiments and responsibilities alive to him, in this state of existence, has something to believe and something to hope for, or else, as life is advancing to its close, all is heart-sinking and oppression.—Depend upon it, whatever may be the mind of an old man, old age is only really happy, when on feeling the enjoyments of this world's wane, it begins to lay a stronger hold on the realities of another. Mr. Webster's religious sentiments and feelings were the crowning glories of his character.

At nine o'clock, the body had been removed from the library to the lawn in front of the mansion, and placed on a bier beneath one of the large poplar trees. From this hour up to half-past one, the thousands present came around and took a last view. The countenance was serene and lifelike. Two garlands of oak leaves and acorns, and two bouquets of flowers, were placed on the coffin. Many shed tears, and grieved for the loss, as of a departed father or dear friend.

The solemnities closed at the mansion at half past one, when the funeral cortege proceeded to the tomb, about half a mile distant.

There were no ladies in the procession, and no carriages, but so great was the length, that scarcely two-thirds had left the house, when the body reached the tomb. Here the procession passed round the coffin, the lid of which was open, and at precisely half-past two o'clock, the tomb closed on the mortal remains of Daniel Webster.

The crowd of mourners then slowly departed. Secretary Conrad was the only member of the Cabinet present.

Rev. Mr. Alden closed the services at the Mansion by an eloquent prayer, and at the tomb he also briefly and appropriately addressed the Throne of Divine Grace.

The entire proceeding were appropriate, solemn, and affecting.

CALIFORNIA.

We have by the mail the following additional items by the Georgia.

THE INTRENUS.—A military force has been organised under the direction of Gen. Paez, which is of great benefit to passengers crossing the Isthmus. The natives are not allowed to carry arms of any description. General Paez and his officers deserve great credit for their vigilance and promptness in suppressing murders and robberies.

CALIFORNIA.—Since the sailing of the last steamer nothing of importance has occurred. The news from the interior relating to mining affairs is somewhat uninteresting, owing to the scarcity of water. Large numbers of miners, however, are in the expectation of doing a good winter's business, dating from the rainy season.

The health in some portions of the mines is bad. At Burton's, Bar, Park's Bar, and Oasley's Bar, several cases of sporadic cholera have occurred, which have proved fatal.

The immigration is fast coming in, and the reports of sickness and privation on the plains are heart-rending in the extreme. The relief train sent out by the State to their assistance have been guilty of the meanness of selling them food and water.

More interest is manifested in political affairs than ever before in the history of our State. The Whigs are at work in every section with an earnest determination, and can scarcely fail of success. Many sterling Whigs are stumping the State for Scott and Graham. Unless trickery and corruption triumph, as in our last election, the State is sure for Scott and Graham. In San Francisco a Whig Club has been formed in every ward. Meetings are held nightly. Nominations for part of the municipal officers have been made, and everything is being done to secure the whigs supremacy throughout the State.—San Francisco Whig.

OREGON.—The latest dates from Oregon are to the 18th inst. A newspaper has been started at Puget Sound, called the Columbian. Coal has been discovered in large quantities at Puget Sound.

MR. WEBSTER'S FOREBODINGS OF DEATH.—The New York Times, suspecting that an incorrect impression may be made by current remarks, as to the feeling which Mr. Webster himself entertained concerning the approaching termination of his earthly career, relates the following:

"When he was last in this city, on his way to Marshfield, he seemed fully sensible of the ravages which time and disease were making upon his system, although, as was his wont, he talked about himself less than upon any other topic. But just as he was taking his leave, a close and cherished friend, who stood at the carriage door, asked him when they should have the pleasure of seeing him here again. With a slow and measured emphasis, and a solemnity which evinced the depth of conviction from which he spoke, Mr. Webster answered—"Never, never!" His friend tried to make a cheerful reply, and expressed the confident hope that a month of repose at Marshfield would restore him to his wonted vigor. Mr. Webster shook his head sadly, but made no reply.

MR. WEBSTER—HIS WILL, ETC.

A correspondent of The Times writes from Marshfield as follows:

"A little incident which occurred only a day or two before Mr. Webster's death, illustrates in a high degree the powers of a strong will, over even an enfeebled frame. A document for the State Department was brought to him to sign; his signature was appended, but by a hand so tremulous that it could hardly be recognized. "Bring me another," said Mr. Webster, cheerfully, as he looked upon his work. "It will never do to send that to Washington; they will think it came from a sick man." Then nerving himself with a strong effort of will, he seized his pen again, and affixed as bold and decided a signature as ever in his full days of youthful, healthful prime. "Now, that will do," said the expiring Secretary, as he sank back again, exhausted.

Mr. Webster made his will only a few days since, signing it on Thursday last. It was drawn up under his direction by George T. Curtis, Esq., who is constantly residing there the newest and most desirable Goods, they are enabled to compete with any Eastern House.
