WEDNESDAY MORNING, NOV. 10, 1852.

Mr. Webster's Real Estate.—It was about a quarter of a century ago, or just before the decease of the first Mrs. Webster, that Daniel Webster made his first purchase in the spot upon which he died, of the late Captain Sutliffe Gerrish. The farm might have contained over two acres, and five, or six, of the good stone fences of his neighbors, north, and east, and west, until he owned, when he died, about one thousand acres. Among his last business acts in Marshfield, was the purchase of additional land.

The Revenge of Trade.—Lundy Foot, the celebrated snuff manufacturer of Dublin, originally began a small tobacconist's shop at 41 Limerick Street, Ship Street High his house, which was unfortunately burnt to the ground. As he contemplated the smoking ruins on the following morning, in a state bordering on despair, some of the poor unemployed, groping among the embers for what they could find, stumbled upon several canisters of rappee, somewhat but half-baked snuff, which they dried and found so grateful to their noses that they loaded their waistcoat pockets with the spoil.

Lundy Foot, roused from his stupor, at length imitated their example, and took a pinch of his own property, when he was instantly struck by the superior pungency and flavor it had acquired from the great heat to which it had been exposed. Treasuring up this valuable hint, he built another house, in a place called "Black Horse" and, preparing a large crop for the purpose, set diligently about the manufacture of that high-dried commodity, which soon became known as "Black Yard Snuff."

Lundy Foot, making his customers pay liberally through the nose for one of the most "disagreeable" kinds of snuff in the world, soon raised the price of his production, took a large house in the city of Dublin, and was often heard to say of his native handsome fortune by, being, as I presume, "instantly reinstalled."—Hone's Miscellany.
