The glory of the Pope, the advancement of the church, the increased power of the Priesthood, the complete moulding of the minds of the people to an entire and unreasoning obedience to the commands of the church—these are his objects and alms. He seeks for nothing higher, nothing more ennobling: Having quenched out of his own heart those natural and humanizing ympathics which bind men in the family relation, and to social life-himself an isolated being with nothing to expect or hope for but in the glory and power of the church, he is a fit instru-
