"When I published these facts, expressing my own convictions and fears, a cuit for libel was instituted by the President of St; Joseph Collego in behalf of the priest implicated; and damages were laid at $10,000. Able counsel was employed on both sides and the suit was pending about were mothe.

The facts I had published were abundantly substantiated by a large number of witnesses; and indeed no atteint was made to disprove them. The plea set up by the priests was, as usual, that the woman was insane. But this was deliberately to a gun-shop, purchased a pistol, procured it to be londed, walked to a school-louse, called out the teacher and shot him dead has been guilty of an act of soil-defence; and editors tell us—upon what authority we knew not—that "the ordence will surprise the community, for it has universally been supposed that this was a deliberate murder." In the meantime, a trial which, had the defendant been penniless would not have occupied a day, is prolonged, that this public sentiment may reach the place where justice is dispensed, and have it effect. We are bound to believe that all these manufacturers of public opinion, upon premises that the public cannot be entrusted with, are the evidence of the public sunctional movement. If they obey they are to be brought before a curt-martial, and if not, they are to be deprivated to an equal respect for truth and integrity.

Where the evidence against the defendant is nuently of the offender, and the direumstances being proyed, we do not understand what the purposes of justice have to do with the fact that the defendant was weak, sick, lame, or that he was "noted from his carilost boyhood for possessing gentleness and mildiness of disposition." It is rather a curious commentary upon this gentleness, that the same disinterested newspaper correspondent who uses the expression above disproved. First, or a large number of wincesses of different denominations and of no denomination, who had known her both before and after there becoming a nun, and by her physician, all of whom testified that ahe was of sound mind, and that they had never heard of her derangement till after her disappearance.
