PARIS, June 7, 1834. The large of Silistria by the place, has created consternation among the place, has created consternation among the ranks of the partizans of Russia; but even from the worse news they contrive to pick up some news of comfort. They now maintain, that if the siege of Silistria has been abandoned; it is not because the place cannot be taken, but because the Russian generals are impatient to meet their adversaries in the open field. Letters from Constantinople of the 29th ult., they say, affirm that the Russian general, Prince Paskiswitch, having 'left a sufficient force to blockade that place, has advanced 'towarde Varma, to meet Omer Pasha, and to give battle to him and to the Anglo-French auxiliaries of Turkey. Reckoning en their superiority in cavalry, the Russian generals are anxions to measure arms with the allied army as soon as possible; and if practicable they will bring the engagement about between Schumla and Varma, where the country is favorable for the movements of cavalry.

Marshal St. Arnaud and General. Ragian returned to Constantinople on the 23d ult, after having conferred with Omer Pasha at Varna, and paid a fign ysist to Shumla, to inspect the Turkish army. They have giren orders for the movements of cavalry.

"They can always be usefully employed, leaving the pursuit of office to those whose souls are set on a salary !" It closes its advice to Southern Whigs as follows:

advice to Southern Whigs as follows:
Our advice then to the Southern Whigs, is:
"stand fast—carry arms." There will always be a field for their services, and a cause worthy of their swords. It may be rallied at any battlecry against power. Adopt the plan of one of your truest and most valiant soldiers, call a Convention to determine noon your future action. rention to determine npon your future action.

But if the Southern Whig party should be severed, dispersed and disbanded—if its name should be no longer known amongst existing party organisations, its spirit will be consecrated by the purity of its motives. It will have suffered destruction rather than aid in the dissolution of the purity of its motives. It will have suffered destruction rather than aid in the dissolution of the Union and the subjugation of the South. It preferred death to treason, and oblivion to reward. And the future historian may paraphrase the epitaph of all gallant and loyal men and say:—"Here lies the Southern Whig party, which, having struggled for republican principles during a quarter of a century, with little aid and much opposition, sank under the treacherous dealings of its mercenary friends. It died as it had been proud to live, asking nothing—receiving nothing, and—fearing nothing."

Wa think the result will be, not withstanding all

We think the result will be, not withstanding all ttempts to prevent it, that the mass of Souther Whigs will join the Democrats. They are both united in one work, the glorification and propogandism of slavery, and why should they stay apart? The Southern Democrats are already inviting them in the most dulcet tonce to unite their fortunes with the great Southern Slavebreeding party, which now controls the country. The Times and Sentinel, of Columbus, Georgia holds out the clive-branch of future peace and union in the following article. After commend. ing a call for a Southern convention, it says: "If the object is to remain in the Union
