THE POSITION OF THE WING PARTY .- These are times which require plain, honest talk. The crisis and the occasion will admit of no subterfuges, no blinking of issues, no wheedling and ca ling. It is no time for canvassing and schem ing and cabals. The people are in no mood to be led by the nose by demagogues, and to swall low-platforms and support candidates under the distation of influential leaders. A great outrage against good government, against political an moral honesty, against the civil, political-and natural rights of the people, has been committed by the constituted government of the country .government, professing to rest upon the will of the people, and deriving all its legitimate powers from the people, has done an act not on ly outraging good government and the first princi ty and political honesty, but has out raged the very principles on which its existence rests, by disobeying, and scorning, and pouring ontempt upon the will of the people expresse in every possible form within their power. This of intolerable injustice and oppression has followed a long series of outrages to which the people had submitted for peace sake. The cup of iniquity is now full, and the people clamor They no longer ask to be led by or redress the nose by Whig or Democratic leaders, on exploded or untimely issues, for mere party suc ess, but are determined to be led sgainst the whole system of slavery propagandism by such leaders nd under such an organization as promises the "Divide and principles which would give it sufficient strength difference manifested or the Nebraska outrage, revealed the total separation of the Northern and Southern wings of the party, and the absolute-mess and completeness of this exparation was ad-mitted by politicians and papers in both wings of the party. It was generally supposed that there was an end of the matter; that there would be no further attempt to keep up the semblance of a political union where there was so complete a diversity of sentiment. This was a mitake. As we mentioned yes-tarday, there are indications that attempts will be made—are now making—to prevent an entire breach between the Whigs of the North and the South.
