and Missions for the Heathen-men who were caressed and highly honored by Protestant Parsons and people as Protestant Saints. And yet these same pillars and consuments of Protestants were found by public opinion or a jury of their country, guilty of the highest crimes and missiquenancs. We further proved that this laxity of Protestant morality might be fairly traced to the cardinal principles of the Reformation, which rejects good works and preaches fore-ordination alone. We finally challenged the Parsons and their followers to adduce any such examples in the Catholic Church as we had selected in theirs—to show us any instances, as by trotestants in good standing,—because we also whole nation is suffring from did not think it necessary. We merely mentioned the names of the culprits which the "Catho-lie" had arraigned, who were Schuyler, of New ducts cannot compete with the imported, would lie" had arraigned, who were Schuyler, of New California: and Beale, of Philadelphia. We knew that the delinquencies of any number of men proved nothing against the purity and uprightness of a church. There was a traitor to the actual wants of the Tensury, by means of a church. There was a traitor to the actual wants of the Tensury, by means of a church is only guilty when she sanctions crime, or screens the criminal, and as there was nothing to show that this had been done in any of the above cases, it fact. The reduction is duties on the contrary trimulates imports, and would bring for the contrary trimulates in the southern Slaver beautient in the Southern Slaver beautient by the conformed bring it is sustained by the conformed by York; Manchester, of Cincinnati; Meiggs, o practices, as weeds from a corrupt soil.

But as the catalogue complains that would not attempt a direct answer to its charge, we go out of our way to say, that the "Catholic" offers not evidence that Messrs. Schuyler, Meiggs and Manchester were members in communion with may Protestant church, or that they were 'hon ordinal caressed by Protestant parsons and people as Protestant church, or that they were 'hon ordinal caressed by Protestant parsons and people as Protestant parsons are parsonal parsons people as Protestant parsons and people as Protestant parsons are parsonal parsons and people as Protestant parsons are parsonal parsons are people as Protestant parsons are people as Protestant parsons are parsonal parsons are people as Protestant pars schristian church, there is no certainty that ne is guilty of the crime alleged against him. He is phelived to be innocent by the great mass of his fellow citizens, and we must heartily unite in this topinion, notwithstanding he was found guilty and is now suffering in prison for an alleged offere, the proof of which rests upon the cvidence of a person who was at the time in a state of stupper occasioned by ether. The conduct of the "Catholic" in parading this case with so much pertinacity and assurance shows not only insensibility merging on brutality, but evinces the weakness of an argument which requires to be holstored-up with such a case. This is the only case were any Protestant ministers have evinced any sympathy, and this grew out of their knowledge of the heretoforo upright character of the man and the improbability that such an offence could have been committed; and yet the "Catholic" strives to make the impression that Protestant Ministers sympathy and this grew out of their knowledge of the heretoforo upright character of the man and the improbability that such an offence could have been committed; and yet the "Catholic" strives to make the impression that Protestant Ministers sympathy and this grew out of their knowledge of the heretoforo upright character of the man and the improbability that such an offence could have been committed; and yet the "Catholic" strives to make the impression that Protestant Ministers sympathy and will be gulprile, and will be completed by the continuence of the control of the contro mess, are those that eschew the Confessional, and keep aloof from all ministerial influences in the charch, and therefore she is innocent of their ideod." This is probably true of all immorphic which the church does not openly or tacilty anticon. There are exceptions, however, to this general rule, and doubtless the Church of Rome has hat cause to mourn over the ording which hyporites have wrought, as well as Protestant churches. The truth is, neither the Protestant or the Catholic churches should be censured for the eril doings of their professed members, unless the evil protects as a natural consequence from the teaching and theology of the church, or is sanctfound in some form by it. Unless the "Catholic" can show that the delinquencies of the witnesses it has produced are the direct or indirect or indirect effects of the teaching of Protestantism, their testimony amounts to nothing except to prove the enmity of the editor to Protestantism and the difficulty he has to make out a case. We do not deal thus with Romanism.—

We do not pick out isolated cases of individual immorphities, and parade them as proofs of the long of the internal parameters in the bosom of our soil, or to run to the case of the delication in the contract of the case of the contract of the case of the contract of the cont

It is this abnegation of self-righteousness, on the part of Protestants, as they approach Christ for salvation, which has been torfured and caricatered by the "Catholic," into the arrodous sentiment that Protestants do not hold good sentiment that Protestants do not hold good works to be right and necessary. Protestants fold that good works are the natural fruit of fold that good works are the natural fruit of true faith, and that they always follow the saving grace of God received by faith, and that by their grace of God received by faith, and that by their cruiss the heliever is distinguished from the uniform the same stockers. We further proved that this laxity of Protestant morality might be fairly traced to the cardinal principles of the Reformation, which rejects good works and preaches fore-ordination alone. We finally challenged the Parsons and their followers to adduce any such examples in the Catholic Church as we had selected in theirs—to show us any instances, as numerous, or flagrant, of persons, known to be professed and practical Catholics, in full and obedant communion with the Church, handed and exteemed by clergymen and laity as worthy sons of the Church and who, nevertheless, were guilty of stupendous robberies and immoralities."

We made no attempt, in our former reply, to dispress the eitherness of the "Catholic" that the crimes releared above had been committed by the exist that the crimes releared above had been committed by the test that the crimes releared above had been committed.

In its former article, the "Catholic" asserted that "Protestants hold that good works are not goly of no use, but they are an hindrance to the fire believer." This assertion we pronounced antrue, and the sentiment aircoicus. The editor in his last article endeavors to justify himself by a duoting from Luther, who says—"Unless faith the without any works, even the least, it does not justify, it is not faith at all." This does not faith the without any works, even the least, it does not justify it is not faith at all." This does not help the editor in the least, but only shows that help the editor in the least, but only shows the least of the least
