an accident. In Austria, in Holland, in Lom-bardy, the husbandmen have usually an interest, either legal or customary, in their land, and the aristocracies of those countries are virtu-ally extinct, and absorbed by the kingly and imperial power; but monarchy without a feudal aristocracy lacks its chief support, and only waits for the first storm of revolution to destroy it.

waits for the first storm of revolution to destroy it.

The fact that Berlin, Vienna, Milan and Rome all readily proclaimed Republics in 1848, demonstrated the increase of republican sentiment in Europe. In Prussia, Austria, and throughout northern Italy, the sristceracy is almost a dead letter. The people hold the land, and so possess the great ground work of Republicanism. The leturer referred to Prussia after the land laws were enacted under Von Stein and Hardenberg. To them Prussia owes her resurrection.

With regard to the Catholic religion—be did not consider it adverse to Republicanism. He thought the best proof of this was in the history of Maryland, but especially in the history of Switzerland. During the provisional governments of 1848, the Catholic people, he said, preclaimed the absolute equality of all creeds, before the law.

ments of 18%, the Castonia people, as and, professing the absolute equality of all creeds, before the law.

Mr. Mitchell then referred to England and Ireland. He thought they least of all the nations of Europe, were progressing towards Republicanism. The feudal aristocracy is still there, and its pristine strength; the people have no hold upon the land, and can have, therefore, no independence of feeling. They, therefore, want the very basis of democracy; and, while their constitution has a show of liberality, the social distinctions between class and class are wider and deeper than in any land in Europe.—Yet, even in England and in Ireland, are recognizable some indications of change in the right direction. There are now two republican newspapers printed in England, and there is a party of republicans there also, watching with profound interest, and invoking blessings on the arm; of the Car, and waiting for the commercial smash which will give them the chance of ruining at last that cunning fabric of oppression. For Ireland, too, said the lecturer, there are men who still dream that the remedy for all her wees lies in a republic, and a republic alone. If it be a dream, God bless the dream. We cannot part with it; we cannot awaken from it now

If it be a dream, tool bess the dream. We can not part with it; we cannot awaken from it now —now, when those treacherous allies—the Usur pas—a December, and the Gracious Majesty o Starvation—have been impelled by an avenging Providence upon the insanest and most hopeles Providence upon the insanest and most hopeless of wars; and when the curse of murdered French and famished Irish, whose blood has cried out from the ground against, them visibly in their mad crusade, and clings to their standards, and confounds their policy, and whelms their ships in the hungry seas. A dream! Be it so; but I, for one, will never relinguish the hope that we may count Ireland, too, in that grand brotherhood of nations, now in seeming death, who wait, with folded arms, for the
