A Sly Mystery.—Two years ago, a young Englishman was arrested in Boston for passing counterfeit money, tried, convicted and sentenced to the State's prison. The money which he had used was of a similar bill on the Weathem Bank, which was taken by the person receiving it to the Suffolk for deposit. The teller of the Suffolk pronounced it counterfeit, and wrote "counterfeit" across the face of it. On the usual mark of the teller was called to prove the bill genuine, and the teller gave as one of his evidences that a month ago, the bill which had been subsequently kept in the District Attorney's office, to specimen of counterfeit, and that the counterfeit felt into the hands of the Cashier while the bank when she immediately pronounced it genuine. Meanwhile the young Englishman was set at liberty after imprisonment in the State's prison of two years. This question arises, can he recover damages, the State or the Suffolk Bank?
