upware of revolution, in the analysis experiment of siling a Boston auditone, from his charicit, that they must learn to a street the research that he has forbidden shir bruber-off the street of the sublimate, and swallowing down repeated provocatives of cantharides to our love of liberty."
When it comes to that, the instinct of despotism knows that the power of liberty is gone, and that nothing but talk is to be spirphended. Our slaveleighstore will at length be glad to see the people of the North mixing cantharides and agitation with their daily food, finding that the more surely does it waste itself in emptiness, and prevent any bold and positive resistance or notorm. Discovering that the Northern conscience satisfies itself with a remonstrance containing the names of three thousand clergymen, instead of ever again receiving such a document with anger and profaneness, even a Douglas will give it a polite welcome, and rejoice in it as an additional safeguard of quietand submission, till the time comes formaking another of Burke's memorable sayings; apply it to whatever uproarious hurrah in the praise of freedom or Fourth of July enthusiasm for the rights of man, may at any time be witnessed: "Hypocorisy of course delights in the most subline speculations; for never intending to go beyond speculations; for never intending to go developed to good manifested in 1853 and 1854, were as follows:

but such proof of life will induce any of our despeptible legislators to change their course, or to be of opinion that this Government and our Constitution were established for the protection of freedom and not of slavery.

Again we ask—Where is this all to end? Some men, habitually asanguine, or striving to be so, affirm that in spite of all the apparent slave-progress, the end will be peace and freedom; but we cannot share such confidence. The insidious advance of slavery into Northern law and Northern Courts, administered as the Central Government wills, at the will of slavery, is gloomy and ominous beyond expression. The striking down of Habeas Corpus, and the proposed removal of slave-cruses, or causes of right, in conflict with Federal oppression, out of the State Courts' jurisdiction to the charge of Judges under the Central Government, are tremendous movements.—

passengers for four years at $10,000,000 per annum..... "The principles of free government in this country," said John Randolph, "have more to East from over-legilation than from any other moths has had its influence upon the business cause." Yes, sir, they have more to fear from of gold mining as well as upon agricultural pro-tion westward, the St. Botts Mirror, or the foldsays:

It is surprising to what extent travel by river has already arrived at. The Missouri takes the palm this season. Platte purchase emigrants, California and Oregon ditto, Mormons for Salt Lake, settlers of Kansas and Nebraska, citizens of our own State, and the rest of mankind, are moving up the Missouri this spring. Every boat goes out crowded.
