April 1, the allied armice were quite ready to open their fire on Schastopol. The Generals probably only awaited the arrival of despatches from home before beginning the bombardment, which might be expected to take place during the ensuing week. The Generals wished to spare the town and public buildings. The Russians still shelled the allies were nearly silent. The fire of muskety on both sides was active every night. The weather was fine and dry. Two fires had occurred at Baiaklava, a circumstance which excited suspicions of treachery.

The Russians were concentrating themselves toward Baidar. The garrison of Sebastopol was on short rations, as the authorities preferred storing up their supplies in magazines to issuing full rations. Advices from Balaklava and Kamiesch of the 6th, via Bucharest, state that nothing important had taken place before Sebastopol to that date. Alerts and akirmishes were frequent. Both sides were pushing on their works with great vigor. The general fire had not commenced. Of seven Russian admirals at Sebastopol to the commencement of the seige, two only remain. A third stockade had been formed in the harbor of Sebastopol, by sinking vesseln in front of the careenage.

VIENNA, Friday morning, April 13.—Nothing now has taken place at Sebastopol up to the 4th lint., inclusive.

Despatch from General Camrebert.
