Brown, General Agent of the recovery of the money he voluntarily confessed his orimes. He says he had no accomplice, and that he never imparted his secret to any one, that he did not commence stealing letters until after the arrest of his brother, whose duties in the office were the same as his own, and of course each had the same opportunities. They were "pilers;" that is, they arranged all the letters for distribution, and had a good opportunity to judge of the nature of their contents.

He states that he has burned all the letters; that he never looked to see who they were for, or from, and cannot furnish any aid in restoring the money to its right owner. The greater part of it was taken in small sums, although one letter gave him three hundred dollars. He has been in the habit of exchanging the money at the banks, principally for eastern funds, and bills of large denomination. After takking the first

A Convention to the Called in Missouri.—

A Convention to the Called in Missouri.—

The Missouri Republican says the convention that has been called to assemble at Lexington, in that State, to consider the position assumed by Missouri on the slavery question, is exciting much feeling in many, counties of the State. The Republican thinks it will be well attended, and it hopes to see the great men of the State in council. We carnestly hope that a conservative feeling will be maintained throughout the convention.

"We earnestly hope that a conservative feeling will be maintained throughout the convention.

"To give effect to this feeling, so far as the voice of St. Louis can be heard, this county should be represented not only by her members in the Legislature, but by a delegation selected from her best Stitiens of all parties. The day fixed for the convention is about the middle of the present mouth, and little time is left for the selection of delegates; but it may be done, and the favorable what of the river will make it easy for them to get to Lexington."
