PITTSBURGH GAZETTE

EPIDEMICS AT NIGHT.—Epidemics have long been observed to rage with particular fury during the night. The Westminster Review gives the following simple explanation:

"It is at night that the stream of air nearest the ground must always be the most charged with the particles of animated matter given out from the skin, and deleterious gases, such as carbonic acid, the product of respiration, and sulphuretted hydrogen the product of the sewers. In day, gases and vaporous substances of all kinds rise in the air by the rarefaction of heat; at night, when the rarefaction leaves them, they fall by an increase of gravity, if imperfectly mixed with the atmosphere, while the gases evolved during the night, instead of ascending, remain at nearly the same level. It is known that carbonic acid gas, at a low temperature, partakes so nearly of the nature of a fluid, that it may be poured out of one vessel into another; it rises at the temperature at which it is exhaled from the lungs, but its tendency is toward the floor, or the bed of the sleeper, in cold and unventilated rooms."
