PITTSBURGH GAZETTE

THE NORTH SIDE OF SEBASTOPOL.—At the latest advices the allies were not in possession of the north side of Sebastopol, where the fortifications are of great strength, and command, on account of their elevated position, the opposite shore. An American who is serving as an officer of the medical staff in the Russian army, gives the following description of the forts on the north side of the bay:

"On the north side of the bay is also a succession of hills, some of which are very high, and running in every direction. You find on them all bastions facing in every direction. These bastions and redoubts are extended up the bay for a mile or two from the city, and some of them are very effective, pouring nearly a continual stream of balls across the bay into the enemy's battery which is nearest the bay. I think it very doubtful whether the French would be able to hold this city for any length of time if they could get possession of it, from the fact that the hills on the north side are taller than those on the south, and the city and the batteries on them, I think, would force them to leave it. In the main they have been attempting this from the land on the south side. I will finish this by saying that it is the best forsaked place I ever saw. There is not a hill or a mound where a cannon could be placed with advantage but you find them."
