PITTSBURGH GAZETTE

Every Englishman from America.—If the emigration of Irish from Ireland to the United States is being gradually diminished, as no doubt it is, the influx into Ireland of American money, earned by Irish hands, is steadily on the increase. Just take a few figures in illustration of this statement. The number who left Ireland for all parts of the United States, British America and Australia, in the year 1854, did not exceed 150,209. Of these 111,095 emigrated to the United States. 22,909 to British America, and 16,202 to Australia. In 1853 the amount of money sent home, for payment of passages, as well as for various other purposes, was £1,459,000; but, in 1854 that amount, vast and wonderful as it was, was far exceeded, it having reached £1,720,000; or nearly £300,000 over what it was in the previous year. In the history of the world there is nothing like this amazing proof of the strength and attachment which has ever distinguished and adorned the calumniated Irish race.—Cork (Ireland) Examiner.
