PITTSBURGH GAZETTE

CURE FOR HOOF ACHE.—Messrs. Editors: I will give you my remedy of treatment for cattle, when diseased in their hoofs. It is well to state that there are two distinct diseases in hoofs of cattle. One is the common foul, as we term it, with little or no swelling of the legs. It is easily cured by an application of some caustic, as blue vitriol, spirits of salts, &c. The other is the real hoof ail. The legs of the animal will evidently become much swollen, attended with a high state of inflammation and apparently great pain. I am indebted to an agricultural paper, taken some years ago, for the following remedy, which I have invariably used since, and in every instance, it effects a cure readily, if attended to immediately.

I throw the animal, or confine it in the stocks or gallows, and with a sharp fine tooth saw, take off the end of the hoof, or toes, nearly to the quick; then with a keen strong knife, cut rounding both behind and above the quick, until you can operate with a ready stroke upon the quick of the hoof, and the blood flows out freely. If a second bleeding is thought necessary, it can be done when the animal is standing, by a prick at the toe with a sharp awl, or other instrument suitable for such a purpose.—Country Gentleman.

VALUE OF LEAVES.—Payen and Cossingault give analyses of leaves from different trees. Taking the average of all their analyses, leaves contain 1.12 per cent. of nitrogen, together with a large amount of mineral and carbonaceous matter. Common barn-yard dung, according to the same chemists, contain 0.41 per cent. of nitrogen, and we may confidently assert that leaves are worth, therefore, three times as much as common barn-yard manure. Every good gardener makes them into a compost with weeds and other rubbish of the garden or orchard.—Country Gentleman.
