How to Cut—It will make a few laquear...
What measure, if any, can be taken to prevent apple trees from dropping their fruit? It is necessary to protect the tree during the winter. Does straw wrapped around the body of the tree form a sufficient protection? Finally, is leached ashes a good means for digging in about the roots of apple, pear, or peach trees? Toura, Kentucky, Ky.

Answer—(1) I know of no better remedy for preventing them to drop the fruit, and to enrich and cultivate the soil as to promote a healthy growth of the tree. Perhaps some of our readers can give advice on this point. (2) We do not deem any protection necessary for apple trees in winter unless it may be to frost days, when the bark is liable to burst near the surface of the ground, by hard freezing in winter. Draining the soil, and mulching the trees with litter or chip earth, will commonly prevent this. (3) Leached ashes are excellent manure for all kinds of fruit trees, especially on sandy or porous soils. But whatever dressing is applied, had better be spread over the surface of the ground, if the trees are of bearing size, or at least over a liberal space around them, than merely "about the root or stem of the tree."
