friend of Wordworths for; peasesang a similar philosophic turn of mind—

"A fellow feeling made them wondrous kind," in imaginative powers, Wordsworth stands nearest of all modern writers to Shakspeare and Milton, and yet in a kind perfectly unborrowed and all his own."

The most popular of the poems of Wordworth is the "Excursion;" and wheever reads the "Wanderer," and feels his heart melt at the tonshing story of the "Excursion;" and whoever reads the wanderer," and feels his heart melt at the tonshing story of the "Excursion;" until he has rambled among the tombs of the "Churchyard," and read upon the chiseled marble and upon the storied urn the history and the end of all human things.

I repeat it, my young friends, in the selection of this work you have chosen an author most agreeable to my taste. For although I am no poet, nor claim kindred with any of the most distant relatives of the "Sacred Nine," yet it in y delight to linger among the monuments they have erected to their own memories; and with those monuments my library is througed. In the tibrary, Wordsworth will now find a most conspicuous place; and with this additional in terest thrown around him, be preferred to all.

Popils of the High School, permit me, in closing my remarks, to express the hope that this public exhibition of your affectionate regard, may knit more firmly the kindly feelings now existing between us; and that, hereafter, in other days, whenever it shall please Providence in His wisdom to sunder the relations we now sustain to e-ch other, the memory of this day, and of this scene, shall revive in each of our heart, these tender, gentle, generous and sacred emother of the cumberland Presbyterian Church, in this city for the last wenty-three years past, has resigned his charge, and socepted a call from Memphis Tenn.
