unites of privileges, with directions to examine and consider the same and report to the floors. So far from his having any personal objection to Sir James Parke, he had, thirty years ago, recommended him as a suitable person to, be raised to the perage; but his objection to the creation was founded on the fact, that no instance had occurred for 20 years in which a Commoner had been raised to a seat in that House by a patent of perage for life. No doubt such pearages were created before the House was formed into its present shape; but to make them precedents for the creation of the peorage to which he now cailed 'attention, would be a gross violation of the Constitution.

Earl Granville defended the loyalty of the appointment, and adduced certain facts in support of his opinion.

Lord St. Leonards was ready to prove that the creation was illegal.

The Lord Chancellor declared distinctly that the creation of this perage was a legal set, which entitled Lord Wenleysdale to a writ of summons to sit in their Lordships' bouse.

Lord Campbell disapproved of the creation and hoped the inquiry of a Committee would prove that the section of the House was contemplated, but merely to establish a precedent for coossionally giving admission to the Upper House.

The Earl of Perby supported the motion for a Committee. He said it had been laid down from the sarliest periods that the escence of the pearage was, that it should be hereditary. With the fall of the hereditary menarchy.

Lord Brougham spoke for and the Dake of Argyll against the 'inquiry; after which it was referred to a Committee, by a vote of 188 sgainst 105.
