Another Letter from Texas.

The base gentlemen are earnestly laboring for harmony of action. There have been several meetings during the day for the interchange of sentiment, and so far there has been ne very wide differences expressed.—

Judge Wilmot is hopeful, firm, and confident of the final success of the great principle he has so ably sustained.

There will be an informal meeting this evening at the Capitol, for the interchange of opinions on a more extended scale, so that gentlemen will assemble in Convention: It will adjourn at too both the sufferings that we were to senguntary the convention. There will be an informal meeting this evening at the Capitol, for the interchange of opinions on a more extended scale, so that gentlemen will assemble in Convention to morrow with a pretty definite understanding as to how far their peculiar views can with safety be pressed upon the Convention. It will adjourn at it to late an hour for a letter to reach you by this mail.

Both Houses of the Legislature have held two sessions to day, and an immense number of private bills have been rushed through, while politics were being discussed in the lobbies. It is expected' the session will close about the middle of April. Our venerable Sensior, Judge Wilkins, appears to enjoy his usual health, and to be as actively engaged in his duties as the left of the war for the reach proposed in his duties as the left was the mate of the beat war to be set as collected.
