SALT ON WHEAT.—Theodore Perry, of Lisco, Ill., in the Prairie Farmer, says:

"Having tried the experiment of sowing salt on wheat, I deem it my duty to give the result to your readers, and I hope that it may be tested by many this season. I was induced to try it by the following statement given through your columns: 'A field of ten acres was divided into equal parts and sown with spring wheat. After the wheat was well harrowed in, one bushel and a half of salt was sown broadcast on half of each piece. The result indicated where the salt was sown, and the result was, that the wheat was ripe by the middle of July, and yielded in the salted portion from four to five bushels per acre. The wheat on the unsalted portion was not ripe for cradling until the latter part of August, and the yield was not more than one bushel per acre. The soil was from four to five bushels per acre. The soil was alike in the several pieces, and the whole was put in my option of the best I ever saw. The result of that in my opinion is the most satisfactory."
