EXPLICATION EXPLACABLIMARY.—A gentleman was conversing with the Professor of Moral Philosophy at the West Point Military Academy, not long since, in reference to text books used at that institution. "What text books do you use in Moral Science?" asked the former. "Way-land." "But how do you get along with the chapter on Sisvery?" "Ohl that is expurgated! The Secretary of War cut that cut." It is thus that Literature, Philosophy and Ethics, are tortured and emasculated for the convenience of Slavery. The Tract Societies expurgate all my and savery must be parts in easing obstact and drowned together. [Laughter and applause.]

Gentlemen, we want, as a further, guarantee of the Union, a bond of connection between the Atlantic and the Pacific. [Cheers.] We want the Pacific Raitroad as a material guarantee of the continued existence of the glory ard prosperity of our Union. I will say further, that bond must have a central, not a southern locality. [Applause.]

Those are the great ends to be accomplished. And if, after all we have submitted to, there is not jluck enough, manhood enough, love of freedom enough in the North; if we cannot be knocked late an attitude of resistance; if in view of past and present wronge, in view of our superior numbers, wealth, intelligence, our superiority in everything but pluck; if we cannot beat, not the South, gentlemen, but our own doughfaces and traitors, then, I say, we ought to wear wishbe and actual chairs of political cervitude, and be handed over to perpetual boadnge.

He was taken from the bench in 1842, and genet to the United States Senate, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of the elequent and lamented Samuel L. Southard, who was at the time of his death the President pro ten. of that body, and who had become such, in consequence of the elevation of John Tyler, to the Presidency. In 1845, he was re-elected to the Senate, and served until 1851 in that body. During the session of 1850, contrary to the capectation of many of his friends, he opposed the Compromise measures. He was particularly bitter in his opposition to the fugitive size law. In consequence of his sturdy, resistance to its passage, he lost for a time his popularity and prestige even with his own party. But the Democracy came into power in New Jersey about the expiration of his sensiorial term, and were enabled to replace him with a man of their own political faith.

Since that time he has been engaged in the practice of his profession with distinguished success. As an orator he is fitent, forcible and commanding. In person he is tall, and is athistically built. He is capable, physically and mentally, of immense labor. His past political saffillations have been with the Whip party.—Although he has uver formally joined the American party, he is known to sympathize with and subscribe to their peculiar doctrines.

Although he has never formally joined the American party, he is known to sympathize with an subscribe to their peculiar doctrines.

It is selection for his present position wa doubtless owing somewhat to his strong opposition to slavery heretofore. He will nertainly be acceptable to all the Republicans through the country if the antecedents of any man can command their confidence.—Phil. Times.
