Aid of the Roman Catholic Church Invoked.

From the Charleston S. C., Courier.

GENTLEMEN: May I suggest the publication of the accompanying communication in your paper. It is to open the question of whether the constitutional party to which it alludes is ready to enter the field and prepare the public mind for disposing a President elected as Mr. Fremont will be. In the Church we have long lists of Popes and Anti-Popes, and they managed in those days to effect the substitution of the former for the latter, without touching, in the slightest degree, the stability of the Church. It is not for me to say how it would be done in a political sense, but we find in the press of the North that plans are rife. One I would refer to: that the President of the United States, Pierce, should possess himself of the treasure and archives of the Government, and assisted by Virginia, maintaining things in statu quo, until the public mind could be brought to a proper compromise. The Carolinas and Georgia would soon sustain Virginia, and the rest of the slave States come in time to support the movement. I need not say to you how necessary it would be to unite the moneyed power of the Northern States in sustaining the interregnum, and hence I have looked to individuals as well as States in the formation of a constitutional party. You see where I place the Catholic body in this communication to Bishop Hughes, or in fact he places it there himself. If you will peruse the Freeman's Journal, of New York, or an extract from it in the Catholic Miscellany of the last issue, you will understand me better. He no doubt wrote the editorial in point. I have every reason to know that the army is safe, and I have no doubt but the navy may be relied on. In fine, in the controversy before us, some measure must be adopted to enlist the minorities of the Free States, the capitalists of those States, and the Catholics of those States. This force, based upon the fifteen Southern States, would, in a few months, silence the pretensions of the Fremonters. But enough, the publication is before you.

Respectfully your obedient servant,

A. H. BRISBANE.
