BELTING
Patent Riveted and Stretched
LEATHER BELTING,
From the Manufactory of Holt & Brothers,
NEW YORK.

TO the Belting of this manufacture has been awarded the Gold Medal and Diplomas from almost every Fair and Institute throughout the United States; the most recent by the American Institute, New York, at their last meeting in the Fall of 1855. It is of superior quality, every branch of the business being conducted under the personal care of the principals; their hides are selected by themselves at their own receiving house, tanned, currried, stretched on machines with every modern improvement, and trimmed on the latest pattern copper rivets, and which perfect the belt, and prevent it from pulling out at the ends. Having them to run truly on the pulleys, and giving a power with less friction than any belt in use, to cotton and wool factories. To mechanics of all kinds makers, sawing and planing establishments, cotton and woollen factories, cotton gins, printing presses, &c., in short to every consumer, this Belting is specially recommended. Orders left at the Store will receive prompt attention. For sale by N. B. GAITHER & CO., Agents for the Sale of the Belting. For sale by the trade in the quality of the Belting.

Rev. Dr. Chesver on Political Preaching.

We subjoin from the New York Times a synopsis of a sermon preached in New York on Tuesday night by the celebrated Dr. Cheever upon "the political preaching of Jeremiah:"

Rev. Dr. Cheever, on Tuesday evening, repeated by request, his lectures upon "The Political Preaching of Jeremiah."

The edifice was crowded to overflowing by an audience which manifested the deepest interest throughout the whole of the long discourse. We select some few passages from it, which are particularly pertinent at this crisis.

The preacher, said he, is like the fabled giant Enceladus, under his volcano. If the giant will be quiet, the mountain will be quiet; and some green things may grow upon it in peace and freshness. But the moment he turns in his anguish, or strives to free himself of his load, the mountain belches forth its fire and fury, the lava rolls down streams of lava, and the poor benumbed giant is the cause of it. Tell me not this is an exaggerated description. Almost every time the light of God's word has been turned directly upon this subject, it has been followed with tumult. Again and again have faithful and beloved pastors been driven from their pulpits barely for giving a single utterance of God's word against the sin of Slavery. At the South a man has been driven from his Church simply for refusing to add his name to a commendation of the dastardly and murderous outrage in the Senate of the United States by a man whose name it is not fit to mention here.

In Washington a pastor has been recently dismissed for one single sermon against Slavery.

In Philadelphia the people have demanded the resignation of the pastor for the same offence. Everywhere, almost, there is this attempt made to muzzle the pulpit—this impious refusal to listen to God's word on this one sin. The conservatism that would prevent the utterance of God on this subject, is a conservatism that stands in the way of righteousness. This very accusation of stirring up contention was brought against Jeremiah himself, when he proclaimed the word of God in Jerusalem against sins which the Government commanded, and which the people declared they would practice, and which not a few among prophets and Jesuits themselves affirmed were no sins, but just a profitable policy. Woe is me, for I have become a rush of contention and strife.

I love peace, and I love my people, and I love my country, and out of love I speak to them this word of the Lord. I have neither lent on usury nor have men lent to me on usury, yet every one of them doth curse me. And
