WEDNESDAY MORNING, NOV. 19, 1856. Bragarius in the Coal Teader.—The MoKeesport Standard, published in the heart of an extensive coal region, thus speaks of the periodical stagnation of the coal trade:

"Since shout two years our community has been sorely baffed in their usual calculations on successful trips to the coal markets below. Not only that the increasing Pomorcy coal trade threatens to interfere withour coal operations, and to reduce the prices at Cincinnati and Loolsville almost below the freighting and shipping cost from our coal works; but, what is still worse, our people here have been deprived for a and to reduce the prices at Unclimati and Loolsville almost below the freighting and shipping cost from our coal works, but, what is still worse, our people here have been deprived for a long period even of a chance to forward its coal ready for the market. We cannot justly blame Providence for such a misfortune. This spring, while the rivers welp fed by a superabundance of snow-water, the golden opportunity for one, or even two shipments, was lost by the undimerstance of the coal miners in demanding an exorbitant price for their labor. Provided by such an unexpected and really unreasonable demand, the owners of the coal works suppended operations rather than submit. The spring floods passed—aummer came—but in anticipated June rise. Summer, too, passed with no brighter prospoots. Fall in its urream and the hoped for rise of the rivers at the election time gain proved to be futile. And Fall has well night adported, and yet there are but few signs of a "flood," in the meantime the crodit system has been stretched to its utmost limits; hard bargains are made for cash loans; almost all the ready home capital, and a good deal from abroad, is embarked in the freighting and rigging of boats, and these lie nearly "high and dry" on our river chores. The detail features of such as state of things we forbear painting—it can have little interest to those shroad; and a home all are familiar with them."

The Standard states also that too many mon of limited means have embarked in the business, and that consequently such roverses as above noted, bring almost certain ruin upon the different proposals that the business bandand and the consequently such roverses as above noted, bring almost certain ruin upon the editor suggests that the business beannaghound, such a received as a strength of the provincer prices, and that consequently such roverses as above noted, bring almost certain ruin upon the editor suggests that the business bandand and the house as the contains to the town, as machine shopping the contains the provincer

The Standard states also that too many men of limited means have embarked in the business, and that consequently such reverses as above noted, bring almost certain ruin upon them, noted, bring almost certain ruin upon them. At the last two o'clock, the bell on the Neptune Engine House was tapped as a signal to hitch up.—The horses were soon attached, and the route through a number of strates as unblished. oute through a number of streets, as published y us a few days ago, was driven over. The distance is said to be about one mile and a half. In eleven minutes from the tap of the hell, the engine reached the corner of Wayan and Liberty streets, where the new plug for her use is located. In three minutes more she throw a small stream; and in about one minute thereafter, a tremendous body of water, from a four inchstream; and in about one minute thereafter, a tremendous body of water, from a four inch nozate deluged the street. The leather hose to which this large pipe was attached could not stand the presente, and gave way, but not until the power of the engine had been exerted beyond what was necessary or usual. Four streams were then thrown, for a great length of time, to the evident satisfaction of every body. She was supplied by nine attachments—eight from the new plug, and one from an ordinary plug. There can be no question as to the utility of the machine, the only difficulty now in the way (as it seems to us) is in adapting her to the service.—
The fire plugs will have to be altered before she can be properly supplied with water. That done, and an ample quantity of hose provided, the steam fire engine would be invaluable. Masonic Hall Cigar Store. F. FAULKNER, IMPORTED AND DOMESTIC Cigars, Tobacco & Sauff.
