THE COMMITTEE OR BRIBERY AND THE NEW thick, sympathized heartily with Mr. Simonton and the editor of the New York Times in their attack upon bell-ory and corruption which they members of Congress in order to procure the passage of a certain bill touching grants of Minnesota lands for rallroad purposes. When the charge was made we were all attention to see sola lands for rallroad purposes. When the charge was made we were all attention to see what would come of it. This interest was rendered intense when the charge made by Simonton and commented upon by Mr. Raymend, respectively correspondent and editor of the N.Y. Thus, attracted the attention of members of the House, was alluded to by a member in his place and drow from another the declaration that there was truth in the charge of bribery: that he himself (a member from North Carolina, Mr. Payne) had been approached for purposes of corruptico, and $1500 offerred for his vote in the matter of the Minnesota lands The ball est in motion by Simonton rolled on. A committee of the House was appointed of which Mr. Ritchle of this district is a member, and power. Mitchle of this district is a member, and power of course given to summon witnesses before their bar. To whom should said committee look, to whom should said committee look, to whom should the country look for such information as will disclose to the House the bribery and corruption charged upon some of its members, but to those very men who were first to declare that they possessed a knowledge of the matter under investigation? Did not Mesers.

Of their own accord they declared themselves possessed of certain facts which if disclosed would show a conspiracy to circumvent a fair and unbiased expression of the House on this Minnesota land bill; that an understanding existed among certain members, and that a corrupt combination was effected by which they could carry matters with a high hand, could defeat or pass any bill for which they might vote. Moreover, that members of all parties were concerned in this matter.
