The principal difficulty is, however, in most if not all our public halls, not so much a lack as regards the ability to beat them as their imperfect, rentilation. Foreaces properly constructed to proclude the passage of dust and cinders, and prevent the generation of numbelesome gases cannot but allow us a good atmosphere in any room which they are placed to heat, provided we have at the same time currents of fresh air to replace those from which the wital element, oxygen, may have been in some degree expelled by descication or polluted by use in the process of breathing. He will be our benefactor who shall bring within the reach of all the means whereby our buildings and our rallway ears may be made comfortable as regards temperature and at the same time fill them with fresh and exhilerating air.
