With friends, those who sustained him in the late what high hopes he assumed the chair of finite campaign, tearing each other to ficees. Will be with chair a secure of interest in the late campaign, tearing each other to ficees. with choice promises of justice to his confiding fellow-oltizens, only four short years ago! What has he done? With what scneations of poignant regret for weak blunders will he leave the capital of the nation where he has been like a spring all it is difficult to be serious over a failure that with many touches in it of the cruly tragic has long since savored vastly more of the ludicrous than of the pathetic. The Vankee Notion, a comlo monthly, in its March number hits off the departing Pierce as well as anything we have seen. A broad-browed, soowling, Minerva looking woman, draped from head to heels in the American flag and crowned with a jounty cap, glowers fleroely upon an old looking, ourlyheaded boy, with the veritable features of Pierce whom she tweaks by the car as he shurrles with prindent haste for the nearest door. The poor boy is drawing his sleeve cuff across his nose and with a little estabel, evidently containing all his worldly goods, looks the very personification of wearen-faced misery not knowing which way to turn. But the banner-clad woman-does not seem after all so unmindful of the comfort of her late charge, for she has prepared a bird, her carrierdove; the American cagle, to convey him to his former home. With alsority the "proud bird of Our TRLEGRAPHIC DISPATCHES. -On Monday the mountain" stoops from his cloudy home. seizes the poor wight, alas! in the most esreless
