We have lately noticed the growth of this thistic about the Cumberland Valley Rail Road Depot, as well as in numerous other places in that portion of the sown. We do not know whether farmers are aware of its nature. If they are, we think that they will not fail to make suitable efforts to exterminate it before it spreads any farther. There are various weeds in this section of the State which are justly dreaded by farmers, but there is none, of which we know, that is half as much annoyance to the farmer, or injury to his tarm; as this.

The peculiarities of this weed are, first, that it sends its roots to a great depth into the ground and at every joint it sprouts, so that however much it may be cut and torn by it hope, it still grows, and just as often as it is cut it is multiplied. If the sod is turned upside down, it immediately sprouts from the joints nearest the ends turned up. On these accounts it is every difficult to exterminate it.

It also spreads very rapidly, from the great quantity of seed which it bears, and which a carried to a great distance by the wind, and, we presume, also by birds.

When once it takes possession of the ground, it monopolises it almost impossible to bind it, or handle it in other ways. Farmers would not wisely by using the atmost care and effort to exterminate it. The provides of the farmer would not wisely by using the atmost care and effort to exterminate it is not checked, many in this locality will soon learn it habits to their sorrow, when it will be very difficult to remedy it.
