It is impossible too soon to be of any service. It is impossible too sea to the end of the present trouble; and if the legislature cannot act intelligently in the premises, it should refuse to enter upon its consideration at all.

In the third place, if the Banks in New York. New England and the West are able to hold out and maintain the payment of specie, there will be no reason for continuing the present suspension; it will be but temporary, and need no legislation to remedy its defects; and if they do not hold out, and the suspension becomes general, the banks of this State can afford to wait a little for legislative relief.

In this view of the case, we trust the legislative relief.
