RIDDLE & Co., of the following, from the Philadelphia North TRE AGAINST ALL KINDS OF EDITORS and PROPRIETORS. Americas:

The comparisons of the exports and imports of merchandise and specie respectively, which we submitted resterday, proved conclusively that the setive causes of the monetary pressure now were almost identical with those which produced the revulsion of 1837. In both cases the excess of imports was beyond even the most extravagant wants of the country, and when they reached the peint that a further depletion of specie would have harrassed the banks, contraction of discounts followed, and with it came, necessarily, embarrassments in meeting our foreign indebtedness. This is simply the whole story of the present difficulties, and it is only necessary, to contract the figures of the two periods and the results, in order to satisfy the most ineffeduous.

**Dear Generate: Al large meeting of the free-men of this mach vaunted stronghold of intense "Americana" and bogus "Democracy," was addressed last night by Davin Vilknor and acquiring advanced to a condition of independence, by which iron would have been cheapened. More than one-half of the British rails imported have turned out imperfect, thus adding vastly the original cost at the expense of our pockets. All of a sudden a check is given to these enterprises by a momentary stringency, and the first effects are a compulsory suspansion of work at the mines and mills, and the turning as money was obtainable at any cost, they were willing to go on. New that contractions is the inevitable consequence of an erroneous policy and would have happened, whether the woolen, cotton, and other manufactories. So long as our industry was protected apainst a feeling of enthusiasm characterised the proceedings that would have done not be sufficient or the contractions were impraction, arcassive importations were impracticalle, and specific duties guarded against the enormous trauds which have grown up under the present system.
