Farmers, instead of educating their sons to the plow and their daughters to domestic duties, have sought to make professional and mercantile men of their boys, and to fit their daughters for more splendid marriages than the country can afford them. It has come to be thought more honorable, somehow, to be a merchant or professional man, or to be the wife of one or the other, than to be a plain farmer or farmer's wife. It is a sad mistake and one which cannot be too soon corrected. We like to see men and women well educated; but if the education they get turns their heads and unfits them for the practical and every way honorable life of the farmer, it were far better that they should not be educated at - all. Every profession in the country is overstooked; and the uncertainty of mercantile life was never better illustrated than in the present wrecked condition of our national commerce and industry.
