Meanrs. Editors:—As the piece published in the Weekly Gazette of the 21st of October, signed "Montcalm" and called by the most of your readers "The Bullet Story," has created more interest than I thought it deserved, and being desirous to afford all the interest in my power to your readers, I have ventured once more to attempt giving you and her relation of some of the incidents of early life on the frontiers; and first, I will just remark that I have no personal objection willing to you from Mr. Walters, that there has been an encampment on the very spot, as described, where the children did take place, or his property as in the valley. evident from appearances on the ground, to the present day, though now unknown to the writer. The appearance of such places are numerous, all through this country, and stamps a farm then owned by Capt. Robert Wallace, (a revolutionary officer); but now owned by James H. Wallace, his grand-son. This fort was nicely selected, situated on a high bank, and surrounded by a wide extended flat, which afforded a safe retreat from the approach of an enemy, as a savage could steal upon it in day-light without being seen, except on the upper side where the ground falls off, towards the mouth of a small run, called Vance's Run, and here the treacherous savages several times attempted to get upon them. On one occasion an Indian approached the fort enough (perhaps at night) and shot a person in the morning at the door of one of these blockhouses, and tried hard to make his escape over the intervening ridge between the fort and the mouth of the run, but his experienced eye caught a bullet whizzing after him, which, entering just between his shoulders, prostrated him on the spot. The savages then, or perhaps both of these persons are buried on the people without regard to consequences. Fort Scott to the scene where the tragedy has spread. During the last years held at that point, twenty-three free State men were indicted for rebellion, under the statutes of the bogus Legislature of 1855, which, makes the crime punishable by death. Friends of the victims to this odious and bloody code, wished to have further investigation of the case which was denied them. They then requested to see the court records, and were refused. Determined not to be treated with such arrant injustice, they claimed their right, and a squabble ensuing, they were set upon by the pro-slavery attaches of the court and a mob of their partisans. In turn, the free State men rallied to the support of their friends and compelled the sheriff to intervene. The captives were then permitted to leave, uninjured. Since that time they have crossed the line into Missouri, where they have raised a force, and now threaten to wreak vengeance whenever they get to the territory. The volunteers in this new foray have principally been from Little Osage, Papinville and Nevada, but the general sentiment of the communities do not endorse the inroad. You may expect to hear of stirring news so soon as their future proceedings are known.—St. Louis Dem.
