Coffee—A Few Iambic Theron.

BY J. SMYTH, OF THE IRVING READING CIRCLE.

If there be blissfulness in life, it is Best found where a good breakfast's spread
From the far land of dreams you've just returned.
You have been tossed on billows of deep sleep;
You've wandered far o'er deserts of nightmare;
You've scaled the lofty precipitous and peaks
Sky-piercing of the Northman Land. You wake
And see at home again, and hear the bell
That summons you to breakfast, as, at sea
And treating shore, the sailor hails with joy
The cold familiar token of the spire.
But if a break fast be a blessed thing,
The Coffee-berry makes it blest. This be my theme.

In a smart Ethiop underneath the sun
Of tropic Africa, dreaming his life away
Amid luxuriant growths, it thus fell out
Around his Earthen hut grew shrubs whose
In myriads, like the jungle's cranes and palms
That bar the march of Elephants—the berry
White as a leopard's fur, and bursting bloom
Like cherries spreading incense on the air
In many an idle day the thoughtful boy
The perfume rare exhaling from the flowers
Of waning autumn he had seen the wind
Shake the ripe berries it blest. This be my theme.

One night a wandering Bushman's fierce dart
Aimed at a soaring bird, missed its mark,
And fell among the bushes. The sudden blaze
Starting about with bright excess of light
Spread with its flaming tongues the long, dry grass
And sent a conflagration through the grove.
The Ethiop shrunk into his hut's dark depth,
But only stirred until noon. And morning came Black as this Ethiop's brow. A sorrow dwelt
With him as well as with the fowls in the coats
But soon a joy will flash across his sombre
Illumine there. So doth the ugly toad
Wear a set jewel in its head to shine by night.

Forth, with a hearty heart, he went to seek
New grazes over green, new jungle-lawns,
He stopped beside the little rill whose stream
Had been his font for all a life,—to cool
His fire parched cheek and bathe his sooty brow
His lips he touched unto the limpid wave
Whose silver drops had often quenched his thirst
His lips he touched—his lips he drew away,
Sudden, and started as the stony Sphynx
Staring right on with wondrous eyes!

Ran darkly purple and a perfume rose
From the swift bubbles breaking over the stone
Like to the incense of his native grove—
And round as the spiced Falernian.
Ah! then he knew the berry in the water
And drank. See, how the sorrow leaves his look
See
