A BAD HANIT - The engine that traverses Liberly street at all hours of the day has got into a very bid habit of late. At about 6 o'clock in the morinng, it commences running up and back, drawing now one car and now a dozen, becking and filing, and, at every stop or chang, mentances of "cold," or discassed the back, drawing now one car and now a dozen, becking and filing, and, at every stop or chang, in borrid discord, enough to raise the dead. To dwellers on the street, the habits of these organizes, and going more as a general thing, in rotari for their trouble and expense. It gives us plassent to wen. There is no quiet, no rest, after that throat of brass begins its av-fal braying. To many of us what are not able to relive before midnight, and 2s whom a morn-ing nap is delightful and needful, that yels are not wheels over the iron track, the ear refuses to accastom itself to a loud and piercing bray, re-believe there is an ordinance of this city forbid-ding anything of the sort in the streets.
