THE FRANKLIN ALMANAC FOR 1859.—This well-known and popular annual, formerly published by Johnston & Stockton, after a lapse of years, will again be issued to the public as formerly. It will be made by the skillful mathematician, Sanford C. Hill, Esq., who will also prepare for its pages such reading matter as will make it an entertaining and instructive magazine. Besides the reliable astronomical calculations, a new and improved table of time, an accurate method of drawing meridian lines, and other matters of permanent value will be added.

Orders for booksellers and other dealers are solicited in advance of publication, as but one edition will be printed, and orders will be filled according to priority.

Food for Swine.—Swine are not always fed as they should be, but they are almost as easy to feed well as to feed poorly. Everybody will agree with them, even when it is buried in practice: nothing is last to them: they are seen, the whole day long, incessantly picking up a living. In well-feed fowls, the difference will be seen, not only in the size and flesh of the fowls, but to the weight and goodness of the eggs, two of which go farther in domestic use, than three from hens poorly fed, or half starved. It is customary to throw the fowls in a poultry-yard, once or twice a day, a quantity of grain, generally corn, and somewhat less than they would consume if they had an abundance. Fowls, however, are more easily satisfied than might be supposed from the greedy voracity which they exhibit when fed from the hand. It is well known, that as a general rule, large animals, consume more than small ones. There is as much difference in the quantity of food consumed by individual fowls as there is in animals. It has been found, by careful experiments, that, the sorts of food most easily digested by fowls, are those of which they eat the greatest quantity; they evidently become soonest tired of, and are least partial to rye. It has also been found that there is considerable economy in feeding wheat, corn and barley, well boiled, as the grain is thus increased in bulk at least one fourth, and the same bulk seems to satisfy them but there is no saving by boiling oats buckwheat or rye.—American Poulterer's Companion heart please the brutes to vising a northe therefore advice him keep them in a stable all the time of harness.

THE PARSNIP.—We wish to call the attention of our readers to a valuable root, too much neglected in this country; the parsnip. No root is better, and we think hardly as good, for fattening hogs, or cattle, or for feeding to milch cows. Pigs will leave almost any other food for the parsnip, as any of our readers may learn by trying the experiment. In Europe many thousands of hogs are fattened every year entirely on this vegetable, particularly in the Islands of Jersey and Guernsey. The English think the parsnip makes sweeter pork than any other food, but prefer to give ground peas or barley, for a couple of weeks before killing, to harden the meat. Butter made in the winter from the milk of cows fed on parsnips is said to be of as fine a color and as excellent a flavor as when the animals are feeding on the best pastures.

We quote the following statement from the best English authority: "As parsnips contain six per cent. more mucilage than carrots, the difference may be sufficient to account for the superior fattening as well as butter making quality of the parsnip. In the fattening of cattle the parsnip is found superior to the carrot, performing the business with an much expedition and affording meat of exquisite flavor, and of a highly juicy quality; the animal eats with much greediness. It is reckoned that thirty perches, where the crop is good, will fatten an ox three or four years old, in ordinary store condition, in the course of three months; the parsnips are given in the proportion of about thirty pounds weight morning, noon and night; the large ones being split into three or four pieces, and a little hay supplied in the interval of these periods. The result of experiment has shown that not only in neat cattle, but in the fattening of hogs, and poultry, the animals become fat much sooner, and are more healthy than when fed with any other root or vegetable; and that, besides, the meat is more sweet and delicious. The parsnip leaves being more bulky than those of carrots, may be mown off before taking the roots, and given to oxen, cows, or horses, by which they will be greedily eaten."

Now, if this is the true character of the parsnip, and we are satisfied it is, from experience, we ask all our farming readers, if it has not been too long neglected? Another advantage for this country is that any portion of the crop not wanted for winter use may be allowed to remain in the ground during the winter, as they are not in the least injured by the frost. When dug they should be stored in a cool place and be covered with earth. The parsnip delights in a rather light, deep, rich soil, though we have often grown good crops on a heavy clay, when dry and well pulverized. If manure is used, it should be well decomposed. The carrot and parsnip require similar cultivation, but as parsnips make a stronger growth when young they are not as apt to be choked by weeds, or to suffer from a little neglect. The plants are much more easily seen, so that weeding is less difficult. Be particular in obtaining a fresh seed, as very little of that two year old will grow.

We have often, hitherto, condemned the practice of preserving fruits by boiling them down with sugar to an indigestible mass. We have had through the season, and have now, an abundant supply of tomatoes, cherries, peaches, blackberries, strawberries, huckleberries, pears, and other fruits, which are as fresh and good as when first gathered, and they have been kept thus with seven less expense that in the old mode of making them into "preserves." these have been kept, mainly, in what are called self-sealing, or air-tight tin cans. The fruits were slightly cooked, and prepared as if for table use, and then sealed up perfectly air-tight. After several year's experience, we shall use the tin cans chiefly this year, with a few wide-necked glass bottles.

TIN FOR HORSES.—Job Jolly never liked his team when he left them, and this neglect cost him two newspapers, one new harness, the death of one horse and a lasting hurt to another, the loss of two children, a crippled wife, and life long remorse—all incurred within one year. There was a remedy—no, not a remedy, but a preventive in the following rule, which should be posted in every farmer's horse barn: Never leave home without a good halter on your horse or in your wagon; never leave a horse or span of horses without securing them by the halter to a good strong post or other solid—never to a shade tree. Do not leave them attached to a plow or harrow or roller in the field without tying them. A little care will save your property.

COWS AND SUGAR.—Travelling a few days in Missouri, in sections where the cows have a wide range, we heard a new enticement to bring the cows home regularly at evening. That was, feeding them with sugar the same as you would with salt. A little handfull at evening, at the same time of day, would bring them back to the gate with a regularity as unfailing as the sun.—After they are well trained in sugar-eating, it may be omitted every other night. A half-dozen notable house-wives assured me that the fact was well worth knowing.—Ohio Farmer.

THE CONDITION OF THE THAMES.—Such is the poisoned and filthy state of the Thames, at London, that the fish are sickened, and become so helpless that they can be taken out with the hands. On being placed in pure water, they revive. An officer of health writes to the Times that the aspect and order of an open sewer is not so offensive or unhealthy as the Thames for the reason that there is a constant agitation and whipping up of its filthy contents by steamboats.—He proposes that the traffic between the bridges by steamboats be stopped entirely, and their proprietors compensated.

The following letter from

SIGISMUND THALBERG,

The original manuscript of which can be seen at the ware rooms of the subscriber, ought to convince any one of the superiority of Chickering & Sons Piano Fortes:

PARIS, March 25, 1858.

MR. HELLOR:—Dear Sir—Since my arrival in America I have constantly used the Pianos of Messrs. Chickering & Sons, and I can only repeat to you (while thanking you for the Piano you have so kindly furnished for my concerts here,) that which I have so often said before, the instruments are the best I have met with in the United States and will compare favorably with any I have ever known.

Yours, very truly, S. THALBERG.

The above 1-4 of Pianos, in addition to those in store, comprises all the styles manufactured by Chickering & Sons.

ALL THE PIANO FORTES manufactured by CHICKERING & SONS ARE WARRANTED.
