Pittsburgh Gazette.

PUBLISHED DAILY AND WEEKLY BY S. RIDDLE & CO., FIFTH STREET, ABOVE SMITHFIELD.

☞ THE DAILY GAZETTE is the oldest Newspaper in the West, and having an extensive circulation among the business men, and receiving all classes, it offers inducements to advertisers as the best medium through which to reach the public.

SUBSEQUENT EDUCATIONAL LESSONS IN HORSE TAMING.—HOW TO SUBDUE A KICKING HORSE.—A kicking horse is the worst kind of a horse to undertake to subdue, and more dreaded by man than any other; indeed, it would not be too much to say that they are more dreaded than all the other bad and vicious horses put together. You often hear the expression, "even from horse jockeys themselves, "I don't care what he does so he doesn't kick." Now a kicking horse can be broken from kicking in harness, and effectually broken, too, though it will require some time to manage him safely; but persevere and patience by this rule will do it effectually.—When you go to harness a horse that you know nothing about, if you want to know whether he is a kicking horse or not, you can ascertain that fact by stroking him on the flank where the hair lies upward, which you can discover easily on any horse. Just stroke him down with the ends of your fingers, and if he does not switch his tail, and shake his head, and lay back his ears, or some of these, you need not fear his kicking. If he does any or all of these, set him down for a kicking horse, and watch him closely.

When you harness a kicking horse, have a strap about three feet long, with a buckle on one end, have several holes punched in the strap; wrap it once around his leg just above the hoof lift up his foot touching his body; put the strap around the arm of his leg, and buckle it; then you go behind him, and pull back on the traces; you must not fear his kicking while his foot is up, for it is impossible for him to do it. Practice him in this way awhile, and he will soon learn to walk on three legs. You should not hitch him up until you have practiced him with his leg up two or three times, pulling on the traces, and walking him along. After you have practised him a few times in this way, take up his foot as directed; hitch him to something, and cause him to pull it a short distance; then take him out; caress him every time you work with him.

You will find it more convenient to fasten up his left fore foot, because this is the side you are on. After you have had him hitched up once or twice, you should get a long strap; put it around foot as before directed (above the hoof and below the pastern-joint;) put it through a ring in your harness; take hold of it in your hand; hitch him up gently, and if he makes a motion to kick, you can pull up his foot and prevent it. You should use this strap until you have him broken from kicking, which will not take long. You should hitch a kicking horse by himself; you can manage him better in this way than to hitch him by the side of another horse.

HOW TO BREAK A HORSE FROM SCARING. It is an established rule in philosophy that there is not an effect without a cause, and if so, there must be some cause for the scaring of a horse. The horse scares either from imagination or from pain. Now, it is a law of his nature, that if you will convince him that any object will not hurt him, there is no danger of his scaring at it, no matter how frightful it may be in appearance. To exemplify this, take a horse that is very easily scared at an umbrella; take that horse into a tight stable, where you can have his attention; take him by the bridle, and hold the umbrella in your hand; when he first looks at it, he will be afraid of it, and if he could, he would soon be out of its reach; but hold it in your hand, let him look at it and feel it with his nose a few minutes, and then you can open and shut it as you please, occasionally letting him feel it with his nose, and soon he will care nothing about it.

In the same manner you can break any horse from scaring at things that may look frightful to him, logs, stumps by the roadside, or anything that you may wish to carry on him. If you wish to make a trial of this theory, just take a horse into the stable, and let him examine the frightful object a few minutes after his mode of examining things, and you will be perfectly satisfied. We have tried horses that would not suffer you to take an umbrella on them shut, and in fifteen minutes you could open and shut it at pleasure, and they will pay no attention to it. There is something peculiar in the horse (though it is because he has not the faculty of reasoning,) You can take any object that he is afraid of, take it only on one side, let him examine it on that side only; do not let the other eye see it; he will be broken on one side, and, as soon as the other eye beholds it, will be afraid of that also; and touches it with his nose; then he will be broken on both sides.

HOW TO TEACH A HORSE TO FOLLOW YOU. Take him into a large stable or shed, take hold of the bridle or halter with your left hand, have a long switch or whip in your right; after caressing him a little put your right hand over his shoulder with the whip extending back so that you can touch him up with the whip applied gently around his hind legs. Start up a little, give him a gentle tap with the whip, walking him around the stable, saying to him, "Come along boy;" or call him by his name, taking him around the stable a few times, holding him by the bridle. After you have taken him around in this way a few times, you can let go of his bridle, saying, "Come along boy," and if he stop say him to the whip gently, and in a short time he will learn that you want him to follow you; then gradually get before him, have him to follow around the stable in this way a few minutes, then he will understand what you want him to do.

After you have taught him to follow in the stable take him into the stable lot, learn him to follow you in that a few minutes, then you can take him into the public road or street, and he will follow you there, and in a short time he will follow you wherever you want him to. You should often put him, and caress him, and give him to understand that you do not intend to hurt him, and he will soon like to follow you. Men often get their horses afraid of them and keep so, and it is their nature to keep out of danger when they apprehend it, after their fears are allayed by conclusions. The way horses arrive at conclusions is generally from experience.

HOW TO TEACH A HORSE TO STAND WITHOUT HITCHING.

After you have taught your horse to follow you, stand him in the centre of the stable, begin at his head to gentle him, gradually walking backward. If he moves give him a gentle cut with the whip, and put him back in the same spot from which he started. If he stands caress him as before, and continue gentling him in this way, until you can get around him without making him move. Keep walking around him, increasing your pace, and only touch him occasionally. Every time he moves put him back into the same place; go still farther from him, if he moves give him a cut with your whip, place him back in the same place. If he stands go to him frequently and caress him. Do not let him stand too long, but make him follow you around in the stable. Then stand him in another place and proceed as before. After you have him so that he will stand in the stable, take him out in the lot and place him there, and in a short time you can place him anywhere without hitching. You should not practice him longer than half an hour at a time.

ON BALKING.

If you have balky horses, it is your fault and not the horses'; for if they do not pull true, there is some cause for it, and if you will remove the cause, the effect will cease.

When your horse balks, he is excited, and does not know what you want him to do. When he gets a little excited stop him five or ten minutes; let him become calm; go to the balky horse, pat him, and speak gently to him; and as soon as he is over his excitement he will, nine cases out of ten, pull at the word; whipping and lashing and swearing only make the matter worse. After you have soothed him awhile, and his excitement has cooled down take him by the bits; turn him each way as far as you can; pull out the tongue; soothe him a little; unrein him; then step before the balky horse and let the other start first; then you can take him anywhere you wish. A balky horse is always high-spirited and starts quick; has his pull out before the other starts; by standing before him the other starts too. By close application of this rule you can make any balky horse pull.

If a horse has been badly spoiled you should hitch him to the empty wagon, and pull it around awhile on level ground; then put on a little load, and; increase it gradually, caressing as before, and in a short time you will have a good horse that will work without troubling you.
