THE RIOT ON FREMONT'S MARIPOSA RANCH.—Our readers have already been informed by telegraph of the riot on Fremont's Mariposa Claim. The correspondent of the New York Tribune gives an account of the riot and recapitulates the history of the claim in order to show just how the trouble originated:

In 1846, Col. Fremont requested Thomas O. Larkin, United States Consul at Monterey, to purchase a ranch for him in California, and, if possible, near the coast. Mr. Larkin had no opportunity to make what he considered an advantageous purchase until the next year, when he bought from one Alvarado the Mariposa ranch, containing eleven square leagues, or 48,823 acres, for $3,000. Since Col. Fremont had intimated a preference for a ranch on the coast, and the Mariposa ranch was in the remote interior, Mr. Larkin informed Col. Fremont that he might have the ranch if he wished it, but if not, he (Mr. Larkin) would keep it for himself. Fremont took it. The ranch had been granted as a place for keeping cattle, and the petition for the grant was accompanied by a map representing a tract in the shape of a very long-necked pear, the bulb including the head waters of the Mariposa river, and the neck running down on both sides of the stream a distance of thirty miles.

This claim was finally confirmed by the United States Courts but when the survey was to be made, the United States authorities refused to survey the land as granted, and insisted upon making the survey so that the ranch should be no more compact in form, and should have right angles. Fremont's agent the owner himself not being present at the time demanded that the survey should be made according to the original grant, which had been in accordance with the map accompanying the petition.—There was a very good reason why this demand of the pear shaped tract included all the good tillable land in that vicinity, and would give the owner the complete command of the river and its waters, both the land and the water being very valuable for farming purposes. The United States Surveyor refused that demand, and requested the agent to say where he would have the branch located. The agent then directed that the survey should be made so as to include the bulb of the original tract, and thence run north to the Merced River, covering the rich quartz mines of Bear Valley. To the United States Surveyor consented to this, the survey was made, the patent was issued, and the legal and equitable title to the land confirmed by the survey is now vested in Col. Fremont.

Before the title was finally confirmed a survey of the ranch had been made, at the instance of Col. Fremont, along the boundaries of the original grant, and this survey was considered as notice by the people in the vicinity that he laid no claim to any land beyond the limits of that survey, and before the final survey was made, many miners and companies, including the Merced Mining Company, had located claims in Bear Valley. When afterward Bear Valley was decreed with all their claims and their improvements to be his property they felt themselves aggrieved, but instead of attributing the wrong to the United States Surveyor from the limit of which they charged it upon Col. Fremont and the United States Surveyor, whom they accused of various forms of fraud in regard to the final location of the grant.

It is now more than two years since the title to the Mariposa ranch was finally confirmed to Col. Fremont; but to this day he is in possession of but a small part of it. He has been extremely liberal in his offers to the squatters; but confident in their numbers, and in the weakness of the Government, they have set him at defiance, refused to pay him rent, or any portion of the gold which they take from his land, or even to give him the barren acknowledgement of a deed to his tenements. Through their newspaper organs, they have persistently abused him; they have threatened to do him violence if he should come upon his own land; they have attempted to rob him by levying enormous taxes upon his ranch, from which, at the time, he could derive no profit.

At last, an effort was made to eject the squatting miners, but the Supreme Court of the State decided that Col. Fremont had no ownership in the gold on his ranch; that the precious metals on land granted by Mexico, belong, under our laws, to the Federal Government, and that the squatters have a perfect right to take as much of the gold as they can get, undisturbed by the land owner.

Col. Fremont, finding himself without hope of redress in the State Courts, brought suit in the United States Circuit Court for an injunction to restrain the squatters from cutting his timber; and the injunction was issued. Now, as firewood is a necessity to the miners, particularly those engaged in quartz mining, and as it is very expensive for them to bring wood from beyond the limits of the ranch to Bear Valley, the squatters have been considerably hurt by this injunction. After chafing for some weeks under the inconvenience, they determined, under the leadership of the Merced Mining Company, to avenge themselves by taking forcible possession of the mines which Col. Fremont was working.

Accordingly, at an early hour on the 9th of July, a party of seventy armed men, under the command of George N. Shaw, president of the Merced Mining Company, and J. Boling, ex-Sheriff of the county, took a swift gallop to the tunnel of the Pine Tree Vein, expecting to find it unoccupied, and intending to taking possession of it. But Fremont's men were already at work and, as a mining tunnel is an almost impregnable fortification, they easily defied their enemies. The squatters, finding themselves unable to dislodge the Fremont party by arms laid seige to the place, to starve out the garrison. But in this, too, they were disappointed; for some of their own party passed provisions in to the besieged, and, when that was stopped, a brave woman carried the food. She was told to stand back, or she would be shot, and a pistol was aimed at her. She drew a revolver of her own, and told the threatening scoundrel to get out of the way, or she would shoot him; and he made way for her.

This state of seige lasted four days. Col. Fremont was outside, and with some friends, ready, in case of hostilities, to fight while the men in the tunnels, angered by long standing troubles, and knowing themselves to be safe, were anxious that the fight should commence; and they were somewhat offended at Fremont for his very peaceable demeanor toward the hostile party. On one occasion, when he went out to hail the besiegers, thirteen rifles were aimed at him, and he paid no attention whatever to the threat; did what he started to do, and returned unharmed. Meanwhile, the Sheriff came upon the ground and arrested the chief rioters, but this had no influence on the rank and file.

Col. Fremont wrote to Gov. Weller, who immediately ordered out the militia, and had them provided with arms and ammunition, but the squatters dispersed before there was any necessity for their services.

Mrs. Fremont and her daughter were in the valley during the whole riot.
