a crafty and unsparing antagonist like Douglas will draw poison from the very honey of Lincoln's efforts. Douglas assumes on all occasions, it may be noted, the aggressive. He makes no feints to ward off blows, puts himself naver on the defence, throws behind him all his past votes, speeches and actions, and flings himself with such headlong impetuosity into the fight that many are wont to forgive the past in admiration of the almost superhuman efforts, the skilful passes and the daring feats which this political athlete exhibits in the defence of the present. Thus it was when the puny Bigler attempted to raise his trembling voice against Douglas in the Senate. Notwithstanding Douglas in the Senate. Notwithstanding Douglas had again abused the people of Kansas when Douglas in the Senate. Notwithstanding Douglas had in his speeches, on that floor, again and abler mae, who would fully sustain the replaced of the speeches, on that floor, again and abler mae, who would fully sustain the replaced of the speeches, on that floor, again and abler mae, who would fully sustain the replaced of the speeches, he at once annihilated Bigler so completely that we believe he has never been heard from since. Douglas did not attempt to defend himself against the weak babble of Mr. Bigler, but run a grand dit at him and discomfitted him at once. Now, this came thing he attempts with Lincoln. He throws the past behind him; he attempts no defence of the inconsistencies of his course, however plainly shown; he goes into the fight with every gun loaded to the muzile, and having fired both broadsides at once, retires amid the smoke and noise in a way that is vastly taking to such as like the rear and splender of battle without regard to the cause or causes which may have led to: it. What Mr. Lincoln needs is to place the little giant on the Lincoln needs is to place the little giant on the Lincoln needs is to place the little giant on the Lincoln needs is to place the little giant on the Lincoln needs is to place the little giant on the Lincoln needs is to place the little giant on the Lincoln needs is to place the little giant on the Lincoln needs is to place the little giant on the Lincoln needs is to place the little giant on the Lincoln needs is to place the little giant on the Lincoln needs is to place the little giant on the Lincoln needs is to place the little giant on the Lincoln needs is to place the little giant on the Lincoln needs is to place the little giant on the Lincoln needs is to place the little giant on the Lincoln needs is to place the little giant on the Lincoln needs is to place the little part of the district.—Clerc. It required that one trial to get the "lay of the land" and learn each the other's taolics. Where we think Douglas will take an advantage of Lincoin which may have some weight, is, in assuming that the Republican party believe or have done or intend to do certain things and then from those false premises reasoning to his own false conclusions. Mr. Linicella was abundantly able to seeep from under his antegonist the ground he assumed in a series of firry questions that formed the commence ment of his speech, but he refused to do sofrom the very fact, we suppose, that they were full to bold and unscruptuous falsehoods. Duuglas will, on some future occasion in the campaign assume that the questions were unanswerable and argue from them as if the answers had been given and were dil such as his case requires. We shall look for the report of their speeches which were to come off at Freeport, yesterday, with interest renewed from having read those at Ottawa.

lenged: the biting sarcasm with which he overwhelms his competitor when absent, loses much of its sting when the subject of it starts up at once to confate it. Mr. Douglas, for example, attempted to palm off upon the people, in his recent effort at Ottawa, a series of resolutions adopted in a small local meeting in Kane county, as the platform of the Republican party of Illinois, adopted at Springfield in 1854. The exposure of this disingenuous attempt did not at all help his cause, notwithstanding there was nothing at all objectionable in the resolutions themselves, unless, as Mr. Lincoln said in reference to another portion of Mr. Douglas' speech, they be construed by a man who will undertake to prove that a horse-chestnut means the same thing as a chestnuthorse.

After reading the two speeches as reported in full, together with the half-hour rejoinder of Mr. Douglas, it sppears to us, laying aside for the moment all political feeling, that Mr. Lincoln made altogether the best, soundest, nost candid and most logical speech: that his positions were tenable, his rejoinders conclusive and thouse were tenable, his rejoinders conclusive and the full, together with the half-hour rejoinder of candid and most logical speech: that his positions were tenable, his rejoinders conclusive and

"It certainly requires a great deal of assurance for a body of men to call themselves Democrata, and stand on such a disreputable platform. They are neither at heart or practice Democrata: and we most sincedly hope the whole ticket will be defeated."

This is a hope in which all decent men will as sincerely join.

Couldn't do in:—A gentleman, a good clerk, undertook to keep tally of the number of times williams made use of the pronoun "I," in his Court House speech, the other day; but after using up a sheet of paper he gave up the task in despair.
