Judge Martin, represented to be one of the soundest commercial lawyers of the realm, held that the defendants were clearly liable for the just damages suctained, and the jury by their verdict upheld the opinion. But more: The Baron, as if in caution to directors who permit the signing of their names to reports without knowledge of the truth or falsity of what they subscribe, leid down the following rule of taw, as applicable to directors of incorporated companies as well as private individuals:

If the Baron's opinions are adopted as sound law in this country, and we do not know why they ahould not be, we must look for an intermediate reform in the management of the corporate institutions in the United States, or what would be hardly less acceptable—ruinous suits and heavy damages against those who are in the habit of "sooking up", their official reports in such a way that they will be most alluring to the public, utterly regardless of the fruth.
