The majority given to Gen. Moorhead under all these drawbacks and discouraging circum-stances was not merely, therefore, a brilliant party victory, but a complete and hearty vindiation of the candidate against his assailants .--The people declared in that emphatic verdict, not only that they did not believe his mendacious libelers, but that they had the utmost confidence in the man whom the administration leaders so fercely and vindictively opposed. The result is to Gen. Moorhead a popular verdict against his reckless traducers-a compliment to his integrity as a man as well as his trustworthiness as a Republican.

Accounting to the theory of the Washington Acconners to the theory of the Washington Union, the Domocratic party must be gaining immensely. The organ of the administration usys that "the Democratic party survives disas-lers and gathers new strength from every recur-rence of them." According to this, Indiana and Ohio must have added handsemely to the strength of the party, and Pennsylvania must have piled up an immense addition to its power. It was the Union, we believe, that spoke of the "factious majority" of the people of Kanasa. As the "factious majorities" are spreading over all the States, which, unlike the territories, feel the weakness of the government more than its strength, it might compliment the administratien by quoting Ames, who says "a feable goverdment produces more "factions" than an op-
