Pittsburgh Gazette.

PUBLISHED DAILY AND WEEKLY BY S. RIDDLE & CO., FIFTH STREET, ABOVE SMITHFIELD.

The Work of Grace in Philadelphia.

To the Editors of the Pittsburgh Gazette.—GENTLEMEN: Having had occasion to spend a month in Philadelphia, recently, it may not be amiss nor unprofitable to give your readers a plain matter-of-fact statement of what I saw there, touching the great religious movement of which you have all heard.

Now a stranger may go and spend a month in a city like Philadelphia and see very little. He may attend to his business, and when not engaged in that way he may shut himself up in his hotel, or in his own room, or he may walk or ride about to see the sights, the fine buildings, the new streets and a thousand other things very well worth seeing but hardly worth telling about. Or he may see a great deal, if he will but take the right way; if he will cast aside the feeling and demeanor of a stranger, throw himself unreservedly into the warm current of social christian life, mingle freely, but not obtrusively, in the society of christians, make their acquaintances, as he soon will, and be led by them to scenes and places of intense interest.

One of the first places that a christian stranger will visit in Philadelphia is the Business Men's noonday prayer meeting at Jaynes' Hall, one of the finest buildings in the city, and centrally located. The first noon-day hour I was in the city, I was there. The weather was warm, yet somewhere from six hundred to a thousand people were assembled, the majority being of the male sex. On the platform there were some twenty or thirty gentlemen, some of whom were clergymen of different denominations. The meeting was led by a converted fireman, with much dignity and propriety, as well as warmth and earnestness. I may here mention that it is a standing rule for a fireman to lead every Thursday and a minister every Friday. On other days laymen, without respect to class, lead the meetings. I felt in a moment that I was in a place where silence, delightful and cheering. The exercises were all short, prompt and to the point. Two stanzas were the most they sung at a time, but it was singing. Three minutes only are allowed for an address, an exhortation or a prayer—so you may believe there were no words wasted: and it is surprising how much a man can say in three minutes when he is put to it. Yet there was no irreverent haste. An address expressed one thought and generally expressed it well. A prayer expressed the thing that lay heaviest upon the speaker's heart, and no more. This it is which makes these meetings so peculiarly refreshing and impressive. I often felt, while in that hall, that the worship there was more like what we read of in the Bible, where men only said what they had to say, and only prayed for one thing at a time.

The use of this fine hall, for these meetings, is given by Dr. Jaynes free of charge. It is, however, in contemplation to purchase a lot a little further up Chesnut street, at a cost of $60,000, and erect a noon day prayer meeting hall upon it, the cost of which will be some $40,000—making together $100,000. The lower story will be divided into three or four first-class store rooms, which will rent for a considerable sum. So you see that the business Men's noon-day prayer meeting is likely to be a permanent institution. It is not a temporary arrangement like a protracted meeting in a congregation, but one enduring bond of unity and brotherhood for christians of every name, of every class, citizens and strangers. But in that hall there are no strangers, unless a man will purposely make himself one.—Men who never went before, clasp each other by the hand and talk, as friends, familiarly and warmly as if they were old friends. The love of Christ is the all-cementing bond, and casts out all suspicion and shyness.

"The poor have the Gospel preached to them." When I was there, they had two large tents, one capable of seating 1,500 people, in the northern part of the city, and another, the size of which I cannot state at present, in the southern part. These are filled every evening, and the whole company in the city take turns in preaching to the people. Sometimes preaching is omitted, and the meetings are devoted to prayer and exhortation. Incalculable good has been done by this means, and really I felt it to be so there. On Sabbath the meetings are kept up at these tents with very short intervals, from 10 o'clock in the morning till 9 or 10 in the evening. Some for whom, some for children: some in the English language, some in the German. I heard a German minister, who labors among his countrymen in the northern tent, relate some thrillingly interesting incidents connected with his labors there.

Until this great work began, the Philadelphia Sabbath had the character of being desperately wicked and riotous men. Their frequent battles in the streets soften on the Sabbath—of company against company, carried terror and dismay to the hearts of the citizens; and for a time the entire suppression of Sunday amusements, of all shows, seriously discussed, sometime after the great religious awakening had fall, after the Jaynes' Hall meetings had been thoroughly established, a morning paper every walk of life, and after the Young Men's Christian Association had been greatly strengthened in numbers and zeal, it was irresistibly projected in one of their meetings to erect a building for their use, and thereby give a greater stringency to prayer in their halls. These halls are generally pretty large, neat, commodious and well supplied with such conveniences. I heard a converted fireman—a noble fellow—tell the rest of the story. He said he was as wicked as any of them, but observing the great and wide spread interest on the subject of religion, he began to attend the meeting just as he had been accustomed to attend the theatre. At the meeting just spoken of, and when the proposal was made, it went to his heart. It melted within him as he had never felt it before; and that, had he not been too nervous, he could have risen at once and thanked the man who made it. Being an officer in his company, he caused an invitation to be sent to the Association to meet at their hall, and the meeting was among that first class commenced. Another and another and another was thrown open, until there was upwards of twenty when I was there, and the expectation was that all in the city and suburbs—about seventy—would be regular houses of prayer before winter.

There is something peculiar to the religion of these firemen, yet frequently in character; for whatever they do, they do it with all their might, whether that be in extinguishing fire, to fight with one another in the streets, or to labor for Him whose spirit has made them gentle and loving, but not a whit less resolute or manly. Never can I forget it, and I never will, for the simplicity, earnestness, directness and heartiness of their prayers for their brethren who yet stand off and refuse to come to Christ.

In most of the halls the meetings are held weekly; in some, I believe, oftener. In one, however, they meet every afternoon from five to six, and it is always full. I went there frequently. A considerable part of the audience is composed of ladies. The services are generally intensely impressive, and yet one can hardly tell the reason why, except that there is the deeply felt presence of the Holy Spirit. One evening, after the sermon had been pronounced, and the people had mostly left the room, I lingered. Two or three young men in the upper end of the hall began to sing in a cheerful tone. Instantly the whole was taken up by others—mostly firemen—and all the State Fair, Allegheny City, Pa. ..... Silver Medal
