THE DETECTION OF ARSENIC.—Dr. Chandler, professor of analytical chemistry in Union College, writes to the Tribune:

Permit me, without expressing any opinion on the presence or absence of arsenic in the body of Mrs. Stephens, to suggest the danger of deciding on its abnormal presence, when such very small quantities have been detected. My suggestion is based on the presence of arsenic, in small quantities, in a great variety of substances in nature. It was found by Walcher in every iron ore, in the soil, marl, and in the sediments of ten different mineral springs, including the so well known ones at Elms, Wiesbaden and Peymont. It was also found in several other springs by Liebig, Will, Figuier, Rammelsburg, Bley, Diesel, Fischer, and Keller. The last named chemist found one-fiftieth of a grain of arsenic in a single jug (two quarts of Pandan water. It has already been detected in twenty-one of the mineral springs of Germany. It has also been found in twenty-seven of the mineral springs of France.☞In one of these, one-thirtieth of a grain was found in one gallon of water.

Arsenic has also been detected in mineral coal; from two pounds of coal, thirty grains of arsenic were obtained. One-sixteenth of a grain of arsenic was found in two pounds of the residue obtained by evaporating sea water. Arsenic has also been detected in charcoal, in pine wood, in the straw and chaff of rye, in the leaves of the cabbage, in the root of the white turnip, in potatoe balls, and in our old linen. Many of the medicines now in use contain arsenic as an impurity: all the antimonial preparations, including tartar emetic, are liable to be contaminated by it. Iron is always accompanied by arsenic, and all soils contain iron, a small quantity of this substance might find its way into the body after burial. It is, moreover, a well known fact that arsenic is habitually used to a surprising extent by members of both sexes, to improve the complexion and give the person a robust, healthy appearance. Finally the great toxicological chemist, Orfila, announced the discovery of arsenic in the bones and flesh of healthy men, and in the bones of healthy horses, oxen and sheep; and it was only after a prolonged discussion with a number of prominent chemists that he confessed himself deceived in his analyses.

It being, therefore, proved that arsenic exists in a great variety of substances, some of which are articles of food, and it being highly probable that it exists in a great variety of substances not yet examined, it is quite possible for a small quantity of this substance to accidentally find its way into the system, either before or after death.

And if Orfila, who made the detections of poisons his specialty, could be for a long time deceived as to the detection of arsenic in healthy men, there must be some danger in deciding its presence in sufficient quantity to produce death when but minute quantities can be detected.

In order to use the detection of such minute quantities of arsenic as a ☞ to indict a person on charge of poisoning, it would be necessary to prove that the person whose body was analysed had never taken any arsenical preparation as medicine, and that any medicine liable to contain arsenic as an impurity, nor use arsenic as a cosmetic, and that the body had reposed in a coffin free from arsenic. In fact, unless decidedly more than a trace of arsenic is found, and that, too, in the digestive organs, not merely in the bones and tissues, there can be no certainty, based on chemical tests, that death has been caused by this poison.

A WIFE WHIPPER KILLED.—THE HOMICIDE ACQUITTED.—WHITEHALL, (N. Y.) November 1.—Wm. Cantwell, of Russeltown, C. E., has recently been acquitted of murdering his brother-in-law Wm. Walker of Whitehall, N. Y., the verdict of the people of both places considering it a "justifiable homicide." The circumstances which theled to affray, in which Walker was stabbed, involves a long history of cruelty and crime on his part. It is some years since he took his young and beautiful wife home to live with him. After the loss of their child, Walker lost his situation as clerk in the bank, began to drink and to abuse his wife.

At night he compelled her to strip herself and march, naked, wherever he choose to go, threatening her life with a drawn sword if she hesitated. He beat her severely, and she will carry the scars through life. Yet she kept these facts concealed from her father as long as possible, from her faithfulness to her marriage vow and it was only after repeated solicitations from her relatives, and when she despaired of his reformation, that she consented to go to her father. That was in September last.—Walker followed her, and was received into the family. On the evening of the 28th of September he was under the influence of liquor, he was sitting near the table where his wife was sewing, and Cantwell was reading. His wife asked him to go to bed, and Cantwell, patting him on the shoulder, repeated the request. Walker in a rage cast a chair, and with an oath, struck at Cantwell, but he escaped the blow; they clenched, Cantwell's head being held down; while in this position Cantwell stabbed Walker five times in the abdomen with a pen-knife; then Walker released his hold; he went to the kitchen and obtained a carving knife, and was returning toward Cantwell when he fell. He survived thirty-six hours. Cantwell sent for physicians, and then gave himself up to the authorities.—Correspondence of the Post.

A SERIOUS CONFLICT OF JURISDICTION.—The conflict of jurisdiction between the U. S. Circuit Court and the Superior Court of Cincinnati in the matter of the Trust Company, threatens to be a serious affair. It is intimated that the Circuit Court regards the act of the Superior Court as an usurpation, and that it will maintain its jurisdiction at all hazards. We learn that Marshal Gifford wrote to the Secretary of the Interior for instructions, and that he received for answer, that it is his duty to see that the process of the U. S. Courts be obeyed at all hazards. That is to say, it is his duty to summon the posse comitatus, and, if necessary, make a requisition for United States troops. Should the Superior Court maintain an equal determination,
