A Naw Era.—It has not been the practice of the Southern politicians to make any appeals to the slaveholders as foliass, and all their efforts have been addressed to the slaveholders as foliass, and all their efforts have been made to further their interests, and protect and guard their peculiar property. So indifferent have they been to the lower stratum of the white population, that the term "South," so the white population, she do the term "South," so the white population, which the population, which the population, which the population, she do the term "South," so the white population, which the population, she do the term "South," so the white population, which the term "South," so the she white population, which the term "South," so the she white the population, which the term "South," so the st
