A Boy's Trials.—The Springfield Republican has a capital article on this subject. Here are some extracts:

HIS REGULATIONS WITH THE "OLD MAN!"

We suppose that the first severe trial a boy has to undergo is to submit his will to the old man, whom he is taught to consider his father. To be restrained in doors at night, to be forbidden to go in swimming five times a day, or to be hindered from pinching the rest of the children just for fun, is an interference with natural inalienable rights, every way injurious to the feelings, and then, when upon some overwhelming temptation, the boy asserts his independence of parental control, and receives a "tanning," with a switch, from a quince bush, either upon his back or his bare feet, it becomes really a very serious thing. We never could see that the smart of an operation like this was at all assuaged by the affectionate assurance that it was bestowed out of pure love

STOPPING WITH THE GIRLS.—The next great trial of that boy is to be obliged by a cruel master to sit with the girls at school. This usually comes before the development of those undeniable affinities which, in after life, would render the punishment more endurable. To be perched out as a "gal boy," to be smiled at grimly by the master, who is so far delighted with his own ineffable pleasantry as to give the little boys license to laugh aloud; and to be placed by the side of a girl who had no handkerchief, and no knowledge of the use of that article, is, we submit, a trial of no mean magnitude. Let us have been there and been obliged to "sit up close" with big Rachel, laughing and blushing till we came to hate her name. We wonder where the overgrown frowzy creature is now, and what the condition of her head is?

THE FIRST LONG-TAILED COAT.—We do not believe that any boy ever put on his first long-tailed coat without a sense of shame. He first twists his back half off looking at it in the glass, and then when he steps out of doors it seems to him as if all creation was in a broad grin. The very dogs in the sky; the cows turn to look at him; there are eyes at every window; his very shadow mocks him. When he walks by the cottage where Jane lives, he dares not look up for his life. The very boards creak with conscousness of the strange spectacle, and the old pair of pantaloons that stop a light in the garret window nod with derision. If he is obliged to pass a group of men and boys, the trial assumes its most terrific stage. His legs get all mixed with embarrassment, and the flap of the dangling appendage is felt upon them, moved by the wind of his own agitation; he could not feel worse were it a dishcloth, worn as badge of disgrace. It is a happy time for him when he gets to church and sits down with his coat tails under him; but he is still apprehensive with thinking of it. Sunday school will wonders if any of the children will ask him to "sewing his long-tailed blue."

GOING HOME WITH THE GIRLS.—The entrance into society may be said to date from after boyhood has passed away, yet a multitude take the initiative, before their beards are presentable. It is a great trial, either to a tender or a tough age. For an overgrown boy to go to a dance, knowing that there are a dozen girls inside, and to knock or ring with absolute certainty that in two minutes all their eyes will be upon him, is a severe test of courage. To go before these girls and make a satisfactory tour of the room with out stepping on their toes, and then to sit down and dispose of one's hands without putting them into cage pockets, is an achievement few boys can boast. If a boy can get so far as to measure off ten yards of tape with one of these girls and cut it short at each end, he may stand a chance to pass a pleasant evening, but let him not flatter himself that all the trials of the evening are over. There comes at last the leaving up. The dear girls don their hoods, and put on their shawls, and look so saucy, and mischievous, and unimpressible, as if they did not wish any one to go home with them. Then comes the pinch, and the boy that has the most pluck makes up to the prettiest girl, his heart in his throat, and his tongue clinging to the roof of his mouth, and crooking his elbow, stammers out the words, "shall I see you home?" She touches her fingers to his arm, and they walk home about a foot apart, feeling as awkward as a couple of goslings. As soon as she is safe inside her own doors, he struts home, and thinks he has really been gone and done it.—Sleep comes to him at last with dreams of Caroline and Calico, and he wakes in the morning and finds the doors of life open to him, and the pigs squealing for breakfast.

CONCLUDING REFLECTIONS.—We have passed over churning, and learning the catechism, because we are fearful of touching this article too long, although we might have talked of butter that would not be persuaded to come, and perplexities of literary turn of mind, and a head that measured seven and a quarter when asked what was the end of man was. Boyhood is a green passage, and we experience in more senses than one. It is a pleasant thing to think over and laugh about now, though it was serious enough then. Many of our present trials are as ridiculous as those which now touch the risibles in the recollection, and when we get to the other world and look upon this, and upon the infancy of the soul through which we passed here, we have no doubt that we shall grin over the trials which we experienced when we lost our fortunes, when our mills were swept away or burned, and when we didn't get elected to the Legislature. Men are but boys of larger growth.

DR. O. W. HOLMES.—A writer in the Boston Transcript says: "While every newspaper in this country has been full of the Autocrat's praises has quoted his poetry, his puns and epigrams, we learn that literary men in England give him even higher commendation. Several London journals have alluded to these papers in high terms, but from private sources we have more reliable opinions. At a dinner party in London, some months ago, Thackery spoke of this series of papers as among the foremost in modern literature, adding with emphasis, that no living Englishman could have written them. Wilkie Collins, after alluding to these articles, and to the new essays of Emerson, said, that "with such contributions, the Atlantic need not fear competition any where in the civilized world." And recently Charles Reade, alluding to the Atlantic Monthly, held this language: "The stories are no worse than Blackwood's and Fraser's, and some of the essay matter is infinitely beyond our monthly and trimestrial scribblers, being genuine in thought and English in expression; whereas, what passes for criticism here is too often a mere mixture cuck-oo and hee-haw—a set of conventional phrases, turned, not in English, but in Normal French and the jargon of the schools. After five and twenty years of these * * * without a spark of thought, novelty or life among them, I turn to such papers as the "Autocrat of the Breakfast Table" with a sense of relief and freshness.

MOTHER.—O, word of undying beauty; thine echoes sound along the walls of time till they crumble at the breath of the Eternal. In all the world there is not a habitable spot where the music of that holiest word has not sounded. By the golden flow of the river, by the crystal margin of the rock, under the leafy shade of the forest tree, in the hut built of the bamboo cane, in the mud-thatched cottage, by the grand peaks of the sky-hissing mountains, the wide spread valley, on the blue ocean, in the changeless dessert where the angel came down to give the parched lips the s
