FIRE SHATTER.

The skater lightly laughs and glides,
Unknowing that beneath the ice
Wherever he carves his fair device
A stiffened corpse is silence slides.

It glareth upward at its play;
Its cold, blue, rigid fingers steal
Beneath the tracklings of his heel
It floats along and floats away.

He has not seen its horror pass,
His heart is blithe; the village hears
His merry laughter; he careers
In festive waltz athwart the glass.

We are the skaters, we who skim
The surface of Life's solemn flood,
And drive, with gladness in our blood,
A daring dance from brim to brim.

Our feet are swift, our faces turn,
Our hopes aspire like soaring birds.
The world takes courage from our words,
And sees the golden time return.

But ever near us, silent, cold,
Float those who descended from the heart
With eager hearts, like us, and sank
Because their feet were overbold.

They sank through breathing holes of vice,
Through rifts in drunkenness or disbelief;
They know not their despair and grief;
Their hearts and minds are turned to ice.

WHEN AND HOW TO APPLY MANURE.—If we consult nature—taking her processes as our guide—we shall see her vegetable fertilizers applied in the fall—and there can be no better evidence that this is a most favorable time for manuring the soil. Circumstances, it is true, may render it advisable to vary from this time, and it is one of the objects of the farmer's study to be able to modify natural laws and to choose in some cases, convenience as his guide. The more perfectly, however, he understands Nature, the better he can command her, but generally, the closer will he his obedience to her teachings. Nature makes no mistakes—she never practices false economy—all progress is by due obedience to her laws.

The application of manure in autumn presupposes that it has become partially decomposed during the summer, and that it will become well rotted by the following spring, when needed by plants upon the resumption or commencement of their growth. It is thus ready for their use, and this is one material advantage of applying manure in autumn. Another advantage is, that this decomposition has reduced its bulk without deteriorating its value, (if properly carried on) rendering its transportation less expensive, while at the same time, the team and the roads are in a better condition for the work. The summer season, too, has afforded time for composting the stores of the barnyard with muck and other vegetable matter, thus increasing largely the amount and value of both classes of material—an important object to the farmer.

Nature if she were question, "How shall we apply manure ?" answers "On the surface." She has no operation analogous to plowing—and while we may think we have improved upon her methods—as we undoubtedly have in this and other respects—we still may learn wisdom from her example in applying manure to awardcrops. Leave it upon the surface—the growing grass will keep it in place, will keep it moist, and will gradually work its decomposition When we would plow in the Spring—it is in the right state and position for our use—for the roots of the succeeding crop—and practice proves this to be one of the best methods of manuring award for any crop. In applying manure on stubble land, it would be well to cover it immediately with the gang plow or cultivator, incorporating it as thoroughly as may be with the surface soil. In spring, before sowing, let the land be harrowed to a proper depth for the crop applied, and the result has been in the cases in which trial has been made—a better crop than from manuring in the spring in the usual manner —Country Gentleman.

HOW TO HAVE GOOD CIDER.—Prof. Horsford of Harvard University, has recently published a recipe for improving and preserving cider, by means of which the progress of the vinous and acetic fermentation s may be arrested at pleasure, and the cider preserved in just such a state as may be desired. A correspondent of the Boston Journal says:

Put the new cider into clean casks or barrels, and allow it to ferment from one to three weeks, according as the weather is cool or warm. When it has arrived to a lively fermentation add to each gallon three quarts of a pound of white sugar, and let the whole ferment again until it possesses nearly the brisk pleasant taste which it is desired should be permanent. Pour out a quart of the cider and mix with it one quarter of an ounce of sulphate of lime for every gallon the cask contains. Stir until it is intimately mixed, and pour the emulsion into the liquid. Agitate the contents of the cask thoroughly for a few moments, then let it rest, that the cider may settle. Fermentation will be arrested at once, and will not be resumed. It may be bottled in the course of a few weeks, or it may be allowed to remain in the cask, and used as draft. If bottled, it will become a sparkling cider—better than what is called champagne wine.

Professor Horsford of Cambridge, was the first to use the sulphite of lime for this purpose, and to him is due the credit of first calling attention its usefulness. It is in no respect deleterious, as the sulphate, into which the sulphite is changed by the liberation of sulphurous acid, is entirely insoluble, and remans at the bottom of the vessel.

The writer has cider prepared in this way two years since, which has remained unchanged and is now a beverage of unsurpassed excellence. The sulphite of lime, not the sulphate, must be used.

A new religious sect has recently been holding a prolonged meeting at Concord, New Hampshire. They number about one hundred, and have not yet fully decided on their name, but are inclined to call themselves the "Orthodox Catholic Church." Their creed is said to be as follows: "They believe in community of goods. Civil law they do not regard, and endeavor, as far as they are able, to separate themselves from its influence. Their laws are Bible laws. Human authority is weak, and, consequently, cannot be perfect. To avoid acknowledging the law of the land, they do not intend to buy any real estate
