INDIAN CORN FOR EXPORT.—The London Mark Lane Express some time ago had an elaborate article on the value of Indian corn as "Food for the Million." It starts with the assumption that none of the cereals holds out greater prospects of a regular supply than Indian corn, especially to the limited means of our own population," and argues that the existing prejudice against Maize as an article of food must sooner or later give way before the progress of science. It shows from analyses that Indian corn meal is more nutritious than wheaten flour, containing more gluten and six per cent. more fat, and concludes that it is "not only more nourishing than wheaten flour, but also more wholesome to the generality of the people, owing to the large quantity of fat and peculiar medicinal elements which it contains." However unanimously Englishman may at first look at "mush" and "johnny-cake," they will soon find that "they keep the stomach and bowels in better order than wheaten flour, lubricating the whole system, and producing a higher degree of health at much less expense," and that they soon learn to like Indian corn in all its various forms. It is true, however, that "Indian corn has flavor or taste peculiar to itself, which the prejudices of this country (England) have yet to overcome." It is, nevertheless, "fast establishing itself among all the civilized nations of the world as an invaluable article of food," and "from experiments made by us lately we have no hesitation in saying that if it were imported here fresh, and free from injury, it would become a favorite at the tables of more than our toil-worn population."

This, however, is the great difficulty. Indian corn is not exported in good condition, and consequently has fallen into disrepute. The Express says: "Indian corn is hardly to be had in this country; for, judging from forty or fifty samples we have purchased, upwards of one-half would not be considered, in America, fit for human food. Even the best samples of corn on the Corn Exchange smell musty, an infallible proof that injury has been sustained either in the "crib" before markeiing, or subsequently in granery or vessel during exportation." It then goes on to say that we have latterly paid much attention to the quality of our sailed corn, "they would find that the Union sustains a much greater loss from the latter than from the former, and that consequently it presents a wider field of usefulness by offering a promising results not very easily estimated in the present revolutionary, progressive, state of the world."

The principal injury corn is subject to arises from the quantity of water it contains when ground or shipped. The Express makes timely mercy over the recommendation of our friend, Dr. Lee, in the Patent Office Report: "When farmers sell corn soon after it is ripe, there is considerable profit in not keeping it to shrink and dry in the crib. It is the practical interference to be drawn from the recommendation of the Doctor in "obviating the short-sighted policy of exposing water to the corn," and says we are inland in thinking "that John Bull will part with his sovereigns for what he has generally too much of already." It is true that we have paid too little attention to the preparation of corn for export, but the Express is mistaken in attributing it to the selfish desire of selling water, however much the quotations from Dr. Lee may favor such an idea. The fact is, Indian corn for exportation needs artificial drying, and when the price of a good article is high enough to pay for the extra expense, means will speedily be devised for supplying John Bull with all he may require. We believe, indeed, artificial drying has already been resorted to, but with what success we have not learned.

It has long been known that Indian corn is exceedingly rich, containing a large quantity of fat, but we were not prepared to find, according to the calculation of the Express, that the 10lbs. of fat in each 100 lbs. of corn meal, estimated at thirty-six cents per lb.—the price of butter in England—is worth something more than the price of the meal. We butter devouring Americans might take a hint from this in regard to domestic economy, and use more Indian corn and less fine wheaten flour and butter. If it is so desirable to introduce Indian corn as an article of food into England, it cannot but be equally desirable that we should use it ourselves. Wheat flour is, at the present moment, worth nearly as much in this city as in England, while Indian corn can be had at a much lower figure than our able English contemporary can ever expect to get it in London. Our principal object, however, in alluding to this article, is to call the attention of farmers and others interested to the importance of using means of sending to England good, fully matured and well seasoned Indian corn, for, in the language of the Express, Jonathan can never be successful in learning John Bull to eat either 'sour flour' or 'mouldy meal,' whereas, on the contrary, he will soon find a ready customer for 'Johnny-cakes,' 'crumpets' and 'slap-jacks,' if he only attends to the quality."—Genesee Farmer.

AUTUMN FALLOWING.—The present has been a particularly favorable season in England for autumn cultivation' and the Mark Lane Express, of Oct. 11th, is quite enthusiastic on the matter. We segregate the opening paragraph:

"Never in any previous year do we remember so favorable a season for the prosecution of autumnal cultivation. The sun has daily shone forth with unusual brilliancy; we have had no rain, with but a cloud to intercept his rays, and the comet's influence has assisted to increase the temperature (?) and to produce this splendid summer weather. It has been glorious for enjoyment, and equally advantageous for work; and we congratulate the agriculturists of the kingdom upon the promptness, the energy, and the despatch with which they have availed themselves of so good a chance to effect the invaluable autumn fallow."

Why this work is deemed so important, is pointed out in an extract from the proceedings of the London Farmer's Club, at the previous June meeting. One of the members said:

"It has been my experience that August and September are by far the best months for the destruction of any amount of weeds or rubbish. It is then that the usual dryness of the soil, the extreme heat of the sun, the high mean temperature of the atmosphere, and the expended energies of the plants themselves—all favor the autumnal work. With judicious management the perrenial weeds cannot live through it: and I am convinced more good can be done by one day's work in August or September, than by five days of hard labor in the spring."

The Express emphatically endorses this opinion, and speaks of the system as one "of such intrinsic worth—embracing efficiency and economy in fallowing, a perfect creation of the soil, improved and increased root culture, more stock, more manure and more corn—that it must become a general system."

The great objection to its adoption by farmers generally, is the great pressure of work both for men and teams at the time, in harvesting spring crops and in preparing for and sowing winter grain. There is no doubt that our stubble ground would be much benefited by immediate culture after removing the crop—and a slight plough'g to turn under stubble and wee
