NEW NAIL PLATE FEEDER.—Sheriff's Patent Self-Acting Nail Plate Feeder for Nail Machinery. This improvement does away with the necessity of a man or boy to attend each machine. One hand can attend four machines, and each machine will cut more nails with this feeder attached, than can be done by four by hand, saving three hands out of four, making the nails more perfect, as it is fed by a screw, and can be run at a greater speed. It is very simple and not liable to get out of order, and can be applied to any machine now in use at comparatively a small cost. It is warranted to work perfectly or no pay. A machine with this feeder attached can be seen in operation at the Fair of the American Institute, Crystal palace, New York. Rights and Feeders for sale by the proprietor, D. W. SHELEY,

DRY PEACHES AND APPLES—50 sks Tommy had sung the peerie doon the back stair, and when the wee laddie rak doon after, Tommy it seems had sung a brick doon after him, and the bit brick had rather scanted his heel, and he had gaen in roarin' to his mither. So up the stair she comes, and just as I'm comin' in the close, there's the black prince's leddie standing at the head o' the stair, shakin her neive at our Tommy, and saying. "O laddie, laddie, if that passion o'yours is no curbed in your young days, it will bring you to an untimely end." Then were the very words that met me as I cam' to the close. So I just made answer, "Go down the stair wi' you, you impident randy go down the stair wi' you; 'an untimely end!' it'll surely be lang before onybody's brocht to an untimely end; for flinging a bit brick at a blackmoor; gang down the stair wi'you, and see in your excitement and no make make such a mistak as to curl your hair wi' your marriage lines." "I care nae mair," quo' she, "for your vulgar insinuations than for the wind blowin; they just indicate the rotten state o' your ain black heart; and doon the stair she went, and up the stair I went, and sortet myself and gaed strucht awa to the laird to see if decent tenants were to be annoyed wi' a wheen trash like that in a sunk flat. Our laird, ye ken passes for bein' a real gude man in the eyes o' the world, 'as wise as a serpent and as harmless as a dove." I could swear for the serpent part o' the business at ony rate. The laird received me very blandly, and listened to a' I had to say; he then sat back in his chair, put up his specks on his brow, and said, very quietly, "I am glad you have called, Mrs Gallacher, I am glad you have called. Your visit gives me an opportunity of stating a matter that I felt some delicacy in mentioning. I have always been of opinion that the part of my property that you occupy has been let rather under its value, but I felt reluctant to raise your rent. Now however, that you talk of removing, I must make a new bargain, so you will know this, Mrs. Gallacher, whether you remain or remove there will be three pounds added to the rent of the house you occupy. And as for the dark people, you certainly have not read that wonderful book 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' or you would know that great lady, Mrs. Stowe, has drawn a magic circle round that poor unhappy race, which it would be perfect sacrilege to think of crossing. For my own part, I would not only rather part, with you but with all my tenants; than be compelled in any way to touch one stick of poor 'Uncle Tom's Cabin.'" I kent perfectly weel that, circumstanced as I was, I couldna flit; so there was me wi' three pounds added to my rent, a'in, and through that abominable book, 'Uncle Tom's Cabin.'

On my way hame frae the laird's I thocht I would ca' in and see hoo a dizzen o'shirts that I had gi'en out to mak' were gettin on. I had gi'en them to a puir creature that lives in ane o' the closes in the High Street—ane o' thae proud—spirited creatures—owre big to tak onything aff the parish—and that slaves hersel, night and day, working for herself and a sister's son, a wee blind laddie that bides wi' her. I was recommended to her by a Mrs. Scrubber who kens geyan weel what to get onything o' that kind done. Ye see it was a charity to put wark into the creature's way, and mair than that, she made the shirts for thirteenpence-half-penny, and that was three bawbees cheaper than I got the last anes done in Bridewell. Weel, when I had climed the lang stair, of course I chappit at the door, and gettin' nae answer, I thocht I would try the sneck. So I opened the door and walked in, and what do you think I saw in the miserable garret, but the puir starved lookin' creatures sittin' owre a wee bit spunky o' fire; and what do ye think she was dacin? reading 'Uncle Tom's Cabin" to the wee blind laddie, the tears comin drappin' owre baith their noses. I stood for a while and said nae thing. Somehow, at the first, I felt a kind o'feared to disturb them, but at last I said, "It'll be a lang time before that puts muckle in your pouch." And when the thin, pale, skinny-lookin' face was turned up to me so very quietly, and she said, "A body shoulden do everything in this world wi' a direct view to their pouch." "Them that has plenty," quo' I," in their pouch deesna need to be so particular." "It's no what provokit, that I steekit my lither nieve, and gied Nelly just as muckle on the other side of the head. So a lump o' a laddie that was stannin' lookin' on, cam' forrit to me and said, "Wife, were ye gaun to Kilcreggan to look for a house?" I said I was. "Weel," quo' he, "ye needna care muckle for bein' keen past the place; there's one house owre for common folk like you; a' the houses at Kilcreggan are for the gentry." "Gentry?" quo' I, and common folk! ye impident monkey, hoo do ye ken whether I'm gentry or common folk?" Quo' he, "a body micht be a wee prazzled wi' some folk, but it's easy kennin' the like o' you." "What do you think," quo' I "if I could maybe buy some o' your gentry?" "Ay," quo' the laddie, "ye're just like a wife that wad buy folk, and sell them tae, but it doesna happen to be the fashion in this country, Mrs. Legree!" Weel, for a' I had gien her, Nelly was that weel pleased wi' the laddie's impudence to me she roar'd and lauch'd till I thocht she would fa' owre the quay. It's my opinion that she would hae fa'en owre the quay if the laddie hadna happen'd to notice her, and cried, "Hold on, Topsy, for, 'spose you're a duck, I 'specks you would sink." The last thing the laddie cried owre his shoulder to me as he took his departure, was, that I should never gang past Greenock when I was gaun to the saut water. So I had just to come awa' hame wi' my finger in my mouth, a' in and through that abominable book "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

An' that wasna the last o't, for I got into mair than ae scrape, through that abomonable volume that very same day. Ye see the sunk flat o' our land has been let for the last twa years to a black man, a cook in ane o' the steamboats. Some say he's married and some say he's no married; but at onyrate he lives wi' a woman, and there's twa-three whitty-brown weans; that there can be nae mistak' about. Weel, it seems our Tommy had been playing in the close wi'ane o' the whity brown laddies, and it seems our Tommy had tean a peerie frae the laddie, and he had made an awful roarin' and greetin' about it, and our Tommy's rather quick in the temper (is father says he taks it o' me). So it seems Tommy had sung the peerie doon the back stair, and when the wee laddie rak doon after, Tommy it seems had sung a brick doon after him, and the bit brick had rather scanted his heel, and he had gaen in roarin' to his mither. So up the stair she comes, and just as I'm comin' in the close, there's the black prince's leddie standing at the head o' the stair, shakin her neive at our Tommy, and saying. "O laddie, laddie, if that passion o'yours is no curbed in your young days, it will bring you to an untimely end." Then were the very words that met me as I cam' to the close. So I just made answer, "Go down the stair wi' you, you impident randy go down the stair wi' you; 'an untimely end!' it'll surely be lang before onybody's brocht to an untimely end; for flinging a bit brick at a blackmoor; gang down the stair wi'you, and see in your excitement and no make make such a mistak as to curl your hair wi' your marriage lines." "I care nae mair," quo' she, "for your vulgar insinuations than for the wind blowin; they just indicate the rotten state o' your ain black heart; and doon the stair she went, and up the stair I went, and sortet myself and gaed strucht awa to the laird to see if decent tenants were to be annoyed wi' a wheen trash like that in a sunk flat. Our laird, ye ken passes for bein' a real gude man in the eyes o' the world, 'as wise as a serpent and as harmless as a dove." I could swear for the serpent part o' the business at ony rate. The laird received me very blandly, and listened to a' I had to say; he then sat back in his chair, put up his specks on his brow, and said, very quietly, "I am glad you have called, Mrs Gallacher, I am glad you have called. Your visit gives me an opportunity of stating a matter that I felt some delicacy in mentioning. I have always been of opinion that the part of my property that you occupy has been let rather under its value, but I felt reluctant to raise your rent. Now however, that you talk of removing, I must make a new bargain, so you will know this, Mrs. Gallacher, whether you remain or remove there will be three pounds added to the rent of the house you occupy. And as for the dark people, you certainly have not read that wonderful book 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' or you would know that great lady, Mrs. Stowe, has drawn a magic circle round that poor unhappy race, which it would be perfect sacrilege to think of crossing. For my own part, I would not only rather part, with you but with all my tenants; than be compelled in any way to touch one stick of poor 'Uncle Tom's Cabin.'" I kent perfectly weel that, circumstanced as I was, I couldna flit; so there was me wi' three pounds added to my rent, a'in, and through that abominable book, 'Uncle Tom's Cabin.'
