THE CUBAN DEBATE.

Senator Thompson's Speech. A Jolly Time in the Senate.

The speech of Senator Thompson, of Ky., on Slidell's thirty million bill for the acquisition of Cuba, has been one of the incidents of the present session of Congress that will be the longest remembered. The sharp, practical wisdom, the dry, caustic wit of the speaker, joined with his apparently shattered constitution, his feeble frame, his entire concentration on his subject, his imperturbable gravity, his evident sincerity, his nervous susceptibility, his eccentric ways, his intense anxiety of expression, his restrained but effective gesticulation, and finally his sitting posture, in which, from weakness, he delivered all but the first fifteen minutes of his speech," all made the speech one remarkable in its way. Of its effect a correspondent says:

"The Senate was full and the galleries crowded. The entire audience were often convulsed with laughter, and the Vice President at last grew too weak to rap any but the most gentle admonitions. Indeed, it was about the only occasion I ever witnessed in the Senate in which the attempt to preserve order was abandoned. The fun got to be so universal and uproarious that it was idle to attempt to stop it."

The speech is too long to reprint in full in our columns, but we select a few extracts which will show its spirit:

Americanizing Cuba.—Two or three very vague notions have been introduced into this debate. Gentlemen have talked about Americanizing Cuba. What sort of Americanizing will go on there? I understood the Senator from Louisiana to express sympathy with Cubans, who he said, were "panting for liberty." Annex Cuba, and men from Georgia, from Alabama, from Kentucky, will go in there; they will say: "The Government has bought it;" and, as against a Cuban, they will consider that it is pre-empted and paid for by them. The truth is, it is hereditary, or it has been taught to them; at any rate, it is in the Anglo-Saxon blood. Our people believe it is no harm to take away from a Spaniard or a Mexican or an Indian anything he has got, and they want; and they do not believe it is homicide or murder to kill him either. [Laughter.] What will do done by our adventurers when they land there? Not to be individious, I will take my own State as an illustration. I will suppose that three Kentuckians go down to Cuba; one of them an old fellow, with a parcel of negroes. As Mr. Buchanan is going to buy Cuba by a sort of forced sale, without authority of law, without calling off other bidders, this old fellow would settle upon some Cuban, hunt him out and take possession. He would then begin to survey and demark for annexation some other man's plantation. He would elbow him, browbeat him, and frown at him; show him bowie-knives and pistols; knock him down with his fist, perhaps, and stamp on him a little in a place where he could not be seen, so as to escape the law. A man would be inclined, naturally, under such a process, to give up. There is a sentiment among our people that they have a right to do that thing; they would mutter; they would marry; or they would do anything in the world to get all that was going.

The other young gentlemen, whom I suppose to go down from Kentucky, are a couple of filibusters—elegant men, having nothing to live upon and doing nothing, and nothing to do any thing upon. [Laughter.] They talk about fast horses, about pistols, shooting, and about gunning, and they can shoot pistols. One of them will get to be an overseer for a widow, and marry her, and the next year you would find the rest of the family disinherited. [Laughter.] The other, being a remarkably spry and good-looking fellow, will run away with some old Cuban's daughter; he would get into the family, and he would be there but a little time before the old man would be in a corner of the plantation, and he in full possession and with a good title. That is the way it is to be Americanized, and the way they will go on when they get there.

Why, sir, there is not a Spaniard now to be found in New Orleans; and I have been there and perambulated over the whole city. There is not one that I ever saw in St. Louis, and I have been there two or three times. At St. Augustine and Pensacola there are none. The truth is, the Spanish race get out of the way of the Anglo-Saxon. Cuba; they

You just put on the plains [illegible] torrid zone, [illegible]lash his sides down with a [illegible]ack of an ass, and [illegible]t to go back there. [illegible]m, with his fierce [illegible]g eyes, pounce in [illegible]venture to say they [illegible]orhood, nor within in forty days. Your [illegible] any sense, how this [illegible]cooled out. I will give a [illegible]t you can all understand, [illegible]ple in the country to on[illegible]cerly talk about our barns in [illegible] called the old-fashioned blue [illegible]o in the country swarms of an[illegible]on of rats called the Norway rats, [illegible]e blue rats. When the travelling [illegible]Norway rat invade a barn, the [illegible]piper for their lives, knowing that [illegible]aten up if they do not leave. They [illegible]ubans "panting for liberty," and [illegible] Cubans panting for life under [illegible]nances. [Laughter.] That will [illegible]of it, evidently and plainly. That [illegible]ese by which the Americanization

Filibustering and the Presidency.—Mr. President, in reflecting on the proposition of the Senator from New York to let off the spirit of filibustering, I must say a word or two more to him. He is a man of eminent ability, and genial in feelings. I do not think his election would be cause fœderis — no breach of the league between the States. He is a constitutional man, and if he should be elected there must be some overt act of oppression, or rebellion, or dereliction from duty, before you could complain. My opinion is, that he is such a generous-hearted man that he would rather lean towards the South, by way of showing that he was impartial. But, sir, I do not want him to talk any more about that gang of Austrians and Netherlandmen and Irishmen in the Rocky Mountains, making his Pacific Railroad, with the idea that that is going to work off the filibuster spirit. It reminds me of an anecdote which I heard about a countryman of my friend from South Carolina. For the first time in his life he saw some monkeys, and from the agility with which they jumped from prong to prong with nice little fingers, he thought it would be the grandest speculation in creation to train them to cotton picking, and got some for that purpose. A friend met him afterwards and asked him how he had made out. "First rate," said he, "except that it took two overseers to watch each monkey." [Laughter.] That will be precisely the way you will work the filibusters out, according to the plan of the Senator from New York.

Mr. President, this is a mysterious thing for another reason. It brings up agitation on the negro question inevitably and certainly. I was in hopes that after we got rid of Kansas, the country would have some quiet. I have been now, off and on, nearly twenty years in Congress, and I trusted that for one session, at least, I should live here in peace and hear no more [illegible]. Now, we have the same old [illegible] that the President [illegible] in the [illegible] Water street. Enquire of A. SCHOONMAKER, corner of Wood and Third street. fe7-2:wd
