Our climate and soil are congenial to the growth of almost every plant of any consequence for the world. The staple products of which we are so famous, are raised in greater abundance and with less trouble, than in any other country in the world; besides there, the products of the tropics, such as sugar, coffee, rice, and cotton, may be raised in such abundance as to be exported to any part of the world. It is very probable that Liberia will become, in a few years, one of the most important countries in the world, and that the products of the tropics will be raised in such abundance as to be exported to any part of the world. It is very probable that Liberia will become, in a few years, one of the most important countries in the world, and that the products of the tropics will be raised in such abundance as to be exported to any part of the world.
